Battling with Diphtheria.

There does not seem to be any abatemen in the number of cases of diphtheria. Almost every day a number of new cases are reported and the sanitary inspector is kept busy tacking up cards and disinfecting residences. In every case where the patient either gets well or dies the city insists upor thorough fumigation and supplies for this purpose two pounds of sulphur, which is burned. Besides this the city furnishes each family with a bottle of carbolic acid. Inspector Carroll reports that many parents do not use ordinary precautions in the matter of quarantining their homes either before or after death. At one place in the Third ward the other day the inspector found seven women sitting around the bed on which a baby had just died from diphtheria. A number of children were found playing in the yar about the house and were promptly sen home. Inspector Carroll says it is the necessity for a strictly private burial, the majority insisting upon all the neighbors and friends being allowed to view the remains. Everything possible is being done to keep contagious diseases under control by the city authorities, but on account of stubbornness and ignorance the inspector bas a hard time of it in some localities.
