

was therefore feeling jubilant over the outcome of the case. "The point in which it will most directly interest and concern the people of Nebraska," he said, "is in connection with the appeal of the bondsmen, which is now pending in the district court of this district. I make this statement, however, on condition that my contention in the Scott case is wholly upheld by the court as I understand from the telegram. If this is the case, then the defense advanced by the Bartley bondsmen, which they secured, is entirely swept away."
