GIVING OUT THE ENGAGEMENT. Be Received. The custom prevalent with us of announce ing an engagement of marriage, says Harper's Bazar, is comparatively unknown in the southern states. In that locality, there fore, the newly engaged couple are spared much of the self-consciousness from which they necessarily suffer when the fact of their betrothal ks made public. That "all the world loves a lover" and that "there is nothing half so sweet in life as love's young dream" are facts as old as love itself. In spite of this—or perhaps because of this—the newly engaged girl is subject to a fire of curiosity and criticism. "How does she behave?" is the universal query. If she looks happy, the comments are likely to be that "she seems blissfully, even foolishly, happy. One would think that she was the first girl who had ever been engaged. How joyful she is at the fact that she is to be married at last!" etc. If the dear young creature takes the new state of affairs with periousness, she is said to 'look dreadfully solemn about it. She cru't be very happy. Why does she marry the man if she does not love him?" And the fortunate man is criticised no less severely; his manner toward his fiancee is commented upon; even the expression of his countenance is made a subject of study. It is a pity that the first flush of happiness should be marred by the knowledge that one is an object of scrutiny and comment, but as such is the case, the newly engaged should carefully guard their behavior in public. It is quite possible for a girl to be very happy without letting her bliss overflow in joyful splashes to the comparative stranger. One girl made herself an object of amusement by delightedly announcing her betrothal to each acquaintance she chanced to meet. Her rapturque "Do you know that I am engaged?" may have been very gulle less, but to the coolly critical observer it was also rather ridiculous. A few dear and intimate friends may be told the happy news by the bride-elect, and they, not she, should announce the engagement to the world at large.

Much might the said to the cogaged man about the manner in which he should re-ceive congratulations on his new condition, Too often he attempts to cover his natural embarrassment by a would-be facetions manner, which is in wretched taste. The fact that the dearest girl in the world has committed her happiness to his keeping is pertainly not matter for jest. Nor need ha have the mien of a resigned pailburger. Not long ago I were so fortunate as to have the opportunity of congratulating a young man on his engagement to a sweet young friend. I gauged his character by his manner in receiving my conventional remark, delivered as I shook hands with him. He returned hand clasp warmly, and a happy smile made handsome features I had before thought plain, "Thank you," he said, earnestly. "I an to be congratulated, through and through! From that moment I knew my friend had hosen wisely. In sharp contrast to this agreeable experience was the behavior of another man under the same circumstances. He attempted to laugh off his embarrassment.

"Ah, thanks, awfully!" with an inane "Ha-ha! I suppose that is the proper thing to say upon this occasion, isn't it?" After all, in this, as in all circumstances in life, a simple, unaffected demeanor is the best form, and the woman or man who remembers this cannot err in demeanor.

New remedies put forth with exaggerated claims are continually coming up; some flourish awhile as fushionable noveities, but nearly all are forgotten before the end of the third year. On the other hand, Chamber-lain's cough temedy has continually grown in favor and popularity during the past twenty-five years. Those who once use it are so much picesed with the result that they nearly always insist on having it when again in need of such a medicine. There is nothing so good for a bad cold.
