THE KINDERGARTEN SYSTEM

Interesting Historical Sketch of Its Origin in the United States. Remarkable Results of the System Noted in San Francisco - Education in Hawaii - Starvation in the Colleges.

An erroneous impression prevails that the kindergarten movement in the United States originated in the east. It is a historical fact, published now for the first time, that the original seed was sown in Ohio.

The humble, one-story frame house in which this quaint pioneer set up her household and labored to inculcate in the capital's infant prodigy the theories of the master, Froebel, is still standing on Rich street, east of High.

Beyond a few articles on Froebel in Dr. Barnard's American Journal of Education of 1855-56, nothing was said in America relative to kindergartens, nor was any attempt made until some ten years later, when Miss Elizabeth Peabody went to France and studied the kindergarten established and taught by Froebel himself.

Miss Froebel remained at the home until 1852, when she died of old age. Her tomb may be seen in St. Nicholas graveyard, adjoining the home, where the kindergarten system is perpetuated on the lines laid down by Froebel's first disciples in America.

Miss Froebel, adequately administered, furnishes a method which in practice serves the purpose of disciplining human passions, says a correspondent of the Washington Post. I do not know any more sweeping proof of the general applicability of this method than that given by the Golden Gate Kindergarten in San Francisco.

The statement of President Harper of the Chicago university that three students have died there of starvation occasioned considerable surprise and comment throughout the country.
