to Havana. Minister De Lome said that even if the Maine were to be destroyed... nothing serious. It was perfectly in accord with usage for war ships of two friendly powers to enter and leave each other's ports.

In response to Secretary of State's question as to whether the Maine had visited American ports on complimentary missions three times in as many years, and if there had not been an American war ship in Havana, the minister said that it was merely because the United States government had not ordered one there.

As to the possible consequences of the Maine's operations, the minister said that the minister expressed himself not at all uneasy.

There was no doubt, he said, of the conservative behavior of the loyal Spanish people in Havana and elsewhere and the only remote contingency which might lead to unpleasant consequences was some overt act on the part of the insurgent sympathizers.
