The wisdom and unwisdom of self-repres-

SPRINGTIME STUFF.

Beauties of Nature Overshadowed by Feminine Decarations.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4 .- A heart-to-hear talk about challie could easily fill the whole of our fashion letter, for here they are from the first batch of soft and tempting beauties, and any woman can take her choice, paying in money all the way from 30 to 65 cents a yard. A challis is a perfectly safe and solid investment for spring, summer or autumn wear, such fine artistic feeling have the manufacturers shown in the dyeing, desorating and weaving of their new output that it is, almost impossible to buy a truly ugly one, and if the expensive brands are the most beautiful the cheaper ones are are the most beautiful the cheaper ones are far and away the most durable.

Candor and experience compels the warning that if any woman is deciding to buy a challes at 65 cents a yard, let her select it in a pretty pale tone, and keep it as one of her calling and church toilets exclusively. These high-priced weaves are delicious to the touch and graceful as China allk, but they are back again with the charming satin stripe, and they will not bear up under the stress of shopping tours, travel, etc.

Their smartest munifestation of color is a clear cardinal red, with black polka dots, and either a red or black satio stripe. The other popular tones in which costlier challis are seen is metal blue, forest green and a silvery gray. Almost without excep-tion they are brightened by white or black polka dots, not all of one size, but large and small dots mingled. A goodly percent are flowered tastefully in small rosebuds, or simply fine rows of pale green similar vine, running between rather wide lavender or pink, or blue bands. The sturdler challis have all the good colors and figures posit, greatly to their beautification, and the last to catch this agreeable infection are the lawns. Ink and paper are not the proper mediums in which to tell of the early blooming dimities, dotted swiss, organdic lisse and that last combination of weaves, silk and cotton wrought together. All these things are more delicate of quality and more artis tically lovely of decoration than ever before. and to garnish them are the prettiest rufflings, made of narrow white net, with a simple cord edge and footing of white point esprit, quite the cheapest things in trimmings seen so far.

This spring is also going to introduce very attractive embroideries, done in butter-col ored thread or white cotton, while yards and yards of white wash braid is destined to garnish those newcomers, figured pique and madras cloth. To add to these glories, fit only for May wearing, are the ribbons, that, whether in sash or heading width, are coming in of taffeta with very elaborately pinked

SPRING MILLINERY.

While in some show windows the reminders of the season to come are pushing aside all thoughts of winter shopping, the milliners are getting in readiness their surprises. In the intermediate season all the fresh hats are of pale gray felt, wide-brimmed, small-crown shapes, trimmed with a few folds of velvet or bows of ribbon and three tall plumes fastened to one side of the crown. These are to be the Lenten styles until Master Sunday will touch the muslin roses into bloom. Then, if rumor is worth anything, we are going to wear strange straw shapes, having the crowns solidly buried in closely massed flowers and fuller clouds than ever of ostrich plumes.

As a sort of foretaste of these grandeurs the double-brimmed hat in gray is offered this week. As can be judged by this, and a reputable milliner stands sponsor for it, wide brims will continue to be worn off the face, with plumes curling gracefully about. Here we have strings in addition, and they promise to cut a figure in April modes though the fact of the matter is they are frequently seen now, as well as the white tulle ruche against the halr, typical of this bonnet. Already at the theaters little bonnets are seen tied by lace strings under the Bonnets and hats exact news of veils that are now being worn in admirable simplicity. White and black lace veils are all but cultrely out of style, and no co-quetries of adjusting the little face masks ere any lorger indulged in. Black dotter nets, or nets woven in black checks or spots are smoothly drawn from brow to chin, while as many women as have the complexions and smoothly-banded hair with which to face sun and wind, go without

NOVELTIES FOR THE NECK.

Perhaps interest in veils has waned be-fore the all-absorbing topic of new ways of decorating the neck. It is really wonder-ful the amount of trimmings women insist on winding about their threats. For the moment it is proper to the your big, soft slik crayat under the left side of the chin and let one end fall to the bust the other to the waist line. The big knot beneath the ear must not have wide loops, how-ever and the newest cravats are made of soft piece silk, edgod with a half-inch scade border of black or white shirred chif-

Some truly lovely neck sashes are made of sheer white swiss, having hemstitched edges and cream lace ends, and these are tied to the left under small lapping collars of white embroidered muslin, or maybe under two collar points, faced with ermine Cravats like these are worn indoors and not with coats alone, and they are going to be worn right straight on through the season up to Easter, and far beyond, because white swiss four-in-hand neckties, having short ends, edged with narrow lace are in among the lawns and muslins, etc. Meantime, just as we have got accustomed to seeing our women wearing anywhere from three to twenty fur tails under their chins, fashion has turned on her heel and declared that the tails must now hang from the back of the neck, and so the greatest majority will be worn until it is time to lay furs aside.

The indications are that as the weather breaks women will pass from fur to feather trimmed wraps, and then to those deco-

the coat is lined with yellow. In fact, every linable garment is brightened within in either bright red or bright yellow. A CORRECT HABIT.

Golf, they say, is responsible for this, as well as for the increasing gaiety of the latest made riding babits. Melancholy black cloth used to be the choice of the smartly mounted woman, but now she chooses her habit in a warm plum color or Robin Hood green or golden brown, and into her waistout and necktie she contrives to concentrate brave show of strices and buttons.

The habit skirt has not varied by a hair's readth or length either in the last two or three years, but the coats for the present have rather long skirts and are made to roll back and reveal waistcoats of considerable galety. These fasten with big flat or round bullet buttons of brass or silver and as the walstecat itself is often either of silk or satin, or very rich tailors' vesting, it may be striped or dotted or even figured to suit individual taste, and some of them are even made with pockets that have flaps, while a full jubot of creem lace and high satin stock fills in above the top vest button.

Such frivolity is only seen, however, in the riding schools and clubs on afternoons and evenings of drills and musical rides. Out of doors a severe high white linen collar is the thing with either a bright cardinal or plaid eacot tie filling in below the chin. In the open air the winter soft bats have been steadily worn by riding women in preference to the too hat or hard derby, for the pliable a to be too hat or hard derby, for the pliable a to has not half the weight of either of the others and is at once a warmer and better ventilated headgear.

On the ice an old-fashioned garment, the cardigan jacket, has come into the most overwhelming popularity. Brilliant red wool ones, hand knitted and fastened up the front with silver livery buttons, quintumber all with silver livery buttons, outsumber all their lively green and blue and black and yellow rivals ten to one. Skaters prefer them to sweaters and find them far easier to fly about in than costly furs and heavy cloth

Only the affluent few sling their muffs about their throats by jewelled chains, but newer and certainly far more appropriate is the cherice for the woman of email means to wear her muff hung to her shoulders by means of a smart varnished or kid finished leather strap, not quite one-half meh wide and fastened by a most practical silver buckle set with imitation jewels, or to better style still of plain polished metal. Another new pretty and mergit tride the Another new, pretty and useful trifle that appeals to femininity in the January days of soughs and sneezes is a little bonbonniere for her muff pocket, or to hang on her purae citain. It is made in the shape of an apple of silver gilt and about its plump sides is engraved the words, the discordant goddess read, "To the Fairest." This small box opens to hold either cintment for chapped lips or useful troches, in case one's throat tickles in church or the theater. BLACK MUFFS.

Of the new black goods there is only one item of news to give, and that is silk and rather thin wool crepon has semehow crept back into fashion. Why this lovely material was ever tossed aside it is hard to say, and it is doubly welcome against the neeason's dressmaking. Just as highly, to iderly women, can be recommended the brocaded bengalines in black and gray that are certainly not shopworn, because this combination of bengaline and satin was only ecently brought out in Paris.

Another pretty Parisian idea we have just get over is that of wearing black glace even-ing gloves worked with white silk in three Service. tands about the wrist to resemble little threadlike bracelets. All the haudsome walking gloves in brown, red or tan have pearl or gilt buttons, increasing, seemingly, every week in size. Only two, or three at six-button suede gloves, for calling, are fastened very prettily by large and perfectly round polished pearls, in any of the colors in which the true oyster pearl is found. Not yet have broad stitchings on the back been received into favor, and the finer the three ittle lines down the back of one's hand overing the better is the style signified.

A few women still cling to the white sueder the heavier glace kid gloves for full diess purposes, calling, receptions and the like, and display rather effective white hand gear, stitched and bound in clost brown, or green silk and leather, on the ice and in the skating rinks, as well as when sleighing, nice and serviceable heavy gray castor gloves with a short fur cuff, are adopted.
