MADE OF HAIRPINS.

Comforts of the Home Constructed from Woman's Best Friend.

Miss Cora Inman, an ingenious American girl, has invented a dozen household articles made from hairpins. If you have a package of hairpins and follow her directions you can have "all the comforts of a home" for 5 cents.

The hairpin has always been considered the last resort of the feminine mind in an emergency. From picking the jealous locks of guardians to opening comfit boxes, from buttoning shoes to extracting corks, from putting out the eyes of a burglar to doing hairpin service, it has been in requisition since the ages began to roll over the sleek and confined locks of beauty. In fact, where anything less than a crowbar was needed the versatile hairpin has been called upon to exercise its talents, with the result that many women have been unconsciously aiding in its becoming a part of the patent office's documentary evidence about what can be done with this remarkable little article, so common and so demure.

Miss Inman has had some of her devices patented, but is not averse to letting the sisterhood into the secret of how she makes some of her simplest and most convenient little "contraptions" out of our old friend the hairpin.

In the first place, there is a spool rack, to be worn upon the person while sewing, and which will prove a boon to every woman who is used to seeking her spools whirl away into corners smaller and more distracting than the haunts of the dastardly collar button. It is made of a single hairpin, and can be snatched from the auburn curls in haste, without leaving the rocking chair, so you see that nothing could be more delightful.

The hairpin is taken by its two wires, or prongs, or tines, or whatever you agree to call them, and crossed so that a loop appears at the top where the arch generally comes. After this has been done neatly and with enough care to leave the loop large enough to go over an ordinary-sized button on the front of the basque, the remaining length of wire is bent into the form of a tiny pair of ice tongs, or "nippers," the ends slightly and sharply bent at right angles with the curve above, and slipped into the hole of a common spool of any shape or size. And there it is, all complete and comfortable, and you have not had to move out of your chair, much less call for materials with which to make this cunning, unique and almost necessary thing.

Then there is a photograph holder, which, if made from a brass or "gilt" hairpin, will prove a delight for some dainty desk. It is made by taking the hairpin just as it comes from the package and bending it over backward about one-third from the top; one other bend in the opposite direction and it is done. The profile makes it look something like the letter "N." Before it is quite complete the legs, or wires, are spread a little at the bottom, enough to make it stand plumb, and it forms a crate de visite rack that is every whit as substantial and good as the one bought in stores for that purpose.

If you happen to be fortunate enough to be the possessor of a number of rings, a "ring tree" will be found a useful and pretty article for the "dresser." They are sold in shops now made of fire gilt. You can have them of black or fire guilt hairpins that will be quite as nice, and you can make them yourself. It takes half a dozen pins—long ones preferred in this case, as in all others.

Three of the hairpins are stretched out to their full length by undoing the arch in the middle and pressing gently until the hairpins are flattened out and form a wire twice their usual length. They are wired together about an inch from the bottom and an inch from the top, and at the bottom the inch left free is taken up and turned at right angles from the rest so as to form a three-legged rest. Then three other pins are taken, bent in the middle like a letter "V" spread out, turned with their legs pointing skyward and wired together at their arch tops. This, fastened to the three legged institution already made, forms a "tree," upon the limbs or arms of which may be hung at night the diamonds and turquoise of the day's wearing.

After that intricate affair, you will want to hear about something very simple. You have it in the bookmark, which is made of a single silver or gold hairpin by bending it over about two-fifths of its length from the top and pinching it together in such a way that when it is slipped into the book it forms a stiff holder for the pages as well as a marker for the place.

The pen rack is made of a hairpin opened up and straightened out, turned up into little hook-like ends at the tips and hung from two tacks above the desk. From this little "bar" are suspended three or four hairpins that have been straightened out and bent into hooks at each end. On the lower row of hooks goes the pen. By using a shorter set of hairpins above and repeating the process just described you can have a rack to hold a pencil as well.

Clothespins are made from hairpins, and so are bill file holders and letter holders. By studying a few of these outlined articles and consulting the illustrations you can soon become quite adept at forming these useful little household articles and can make up in your own mind the other useful things your personal needs call for.

There are already three styles of knitting silk bill holders, which can be better understood from the illustrations, and the rules laid down for the other articles can be applied here.

The kitchen ball of twine holder deserves some mention, however. It is made by taking six hairpins, straightening them out until they form a flat piece of wire, bowing them until they are round enough to fit a ball of cord, and then wiring them at both ends and making them into a sort of oval cage for the cord. The upper ends are hooked for hanging the holder to the gas jet and the lower end is left loosely arranged, so that the end of the cord may be dropped through for reeling off for use. And there are others.

A New Crazy Set in Connecticut.

A lot of fanatics in the state recently immersed an old rheumatic woman bodily in water to "heal her" as they said. She nearly died in consequence. How much better it would have been to have treated the poor old woman for her infirmity with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which not only cures Rheumatism, but prevents kidney complaint and remedies dyspepsia, constipation, liver trouble and nervous prostration. Give it a systematic trial.
