RESULT OF THE ELECTION

Several Surprises in Store for the Local Politicians. VOTERS IGNORE ALL OF THE PARTY LINES

Victor Jennings, Mayor-Elect, Feels that He Owe His Place to the Support of the Republicans.

Neither the democrats nor republicans have sufficiently recovered from the shock of surprise at the result of the city election Monday to tell how it occurred.

When the polls closed there was not a man among the leaders of either party who would hazard an opinion as to the result or declare with any degree of enthusiasm his belief that his party would win.

There was a feeling on the part of the republican managers that a large number of republicans would either refrain from voting or cast their ballots against the republican nominees.

The republicans were not so sure of their own strength as they were in the past, but they were probably revolted, and both sides were in a state of uncertainty that approached the acute all day long.

The revolt came with greater magnitude than was deemed possible by the republicans or hoped for by the democrats.

It swept away the entire republican ticket, with a few minor exceptions. One of these candidates was elected in his ward, and was elected by a margin of only a few votes.

He was the head of one of the departments, the auditor's office. He was elected by a margin of nearly 700 votes.

It was a surprise to the democrats that he should have been elected, and that he should have done so by a margin of nearly 700 votes.

The result of the election was purely and simply a revolt from the republican party by a number of voters who have assumed that privilege within the last few years.

The party was doomed to defeat when it was announced that these men would vote for the democrats on Monday.

The first of the year had selected the names of a majority of the delegates to the convention, and the circumstances were such that the chance for the convention to do otherwise than it did, and the selection of the ticket only emphasized a little more emphatically the distance between the two parties.

DEMOCRATS WELL ORGANIZED. Good generalship marked the democratic campaign from the start.

A good start was made by putting up a ticket that was unassailable, and was followed by placing before the voters a ticket that was the best product of a democratic convention for many years.

The ticket was well organized, and was followed by placing before the voters a ticket that was the best product of a democratic convention for many years.

Whether there was enough of these kind of votes placed in the ballot boxes to change the result is an interesting question that will perhaps be answered in a few days.

The defeated candidates who were only a comparatively small number of votes lack a notion to contest the election. It is doubtful, however, if they would do so.

The fact that the result is not displeasing to a large majority of the voters will not encourage any contest.

Jennings, the new mayor, is a citizen who has lived here for many years, is a successful business man, and has a clean record in every respect.

The docket for the term is fully as large as at any previous time and the probability is that the term will not be concluded before June 1. The most important cases to be tried will be the retrial of the big damage case of Deere, Wells & Co. against the Milwaukee Railway company.

It is expected that this case will be reached toward the end of the term and will be about the last equity case tried.

In Lemars aldermen were elected in three wards and two republicans were elected. The mayor is republican.

In Rock Rapids aldermen J. W. Roach was elected mayor on a citizens' ticket. Four hundred and fifty-three votes were cast, the largest ever in the history of the city.

In Cherokee three aldermen were elected, but not on political lines, and a proposition for a tax for library purposes was defeated.

Clinton voted republican in the city election. George D. McDaniel being elected mayor over Nils Nielsen, democrat, by about 500 majority.

The republicans elected the entire city ticket and one alderman. A citizens' ticket was successful in Sibley and T. O. Miller was elected mayor.

Republicans elected three aldermen in Okaloosa and the democrats two. The entire republican ticket was elected in Onawa, except assessor.

Three republicans and two democrats were elected aldermen at Independence, which makes no change in the complexion of the council.

Gov. Shaw Sends in His Appointees as Members of the Board of Control—Sitting Committee Named.

DES MOINES, March 29.—(Special Telegram.)—The senate this afternoon passed a resolution to adjourn at noon on Thursday, the house already having taken similar action.

The terms of the resolution will govern final dissolution. Business is in such shape that there is not likely to be trouble about adjournment at that time.

The forenoon Governor Shaw sent to the senate his nominations for places on the Board of Control. As previously announced he named William Larrabee, L. G. Kinno and John Cowles. The senate in executive session received the message and Lieutenant Governor Milliman, in accordance with the law, appointed a special committee of Healy, Junk, Treadwell and Hays to select the first three republicans and the last two democrats, to consider and report tomorrow recommendations whether they should be confirmed. There is no doubt they will be promptly confirmed. The board of control law, by reason of official publication, took effect today.
