INDIA'S HOARDED WEALTH.

Millions of Gold Bricked Up in Secret

Vaults. During the first decade of my residence in India, relates a correspondent of the Springfield Republican, I was for some years associated with a wealthy banker named Lalla Muttra Pershaud, the Labore agent of the great banking house known as "The Seths of Muttra," and from him I learned a great deal about the system of hoarding practiced in all ages by the wealthy classes of India. He died at B indabun about 1867. It may be explained that the title "Lalla" used by be explained that the title "Lalla" used by native bankers has no exact equivalent in native bankers has no exact equivalent in English. It might with equal propriety be translated master, professor or banker. Both in ancient and modern times one of the stock objections of European nations against trade with India has been that that country absorbs a large amount of the prec-ious metals, which it never discorges. It has naturally been asked what becomes of these naturally been asked what becomes of these treasures, for we do not find in India that abundance of either gold or silver which might naturally be expected; and the reply has always been that they are withdrawn from circulation as currency by being hearded. For ages it has been a prevalent opinion in all eastern countries that there is a vast *11:55 pm amount of treasure hidden in the earth, which, unless found by accident, is lost to man. • 9:05 pm man. When up country last year I heard that Chowringhee Lalla, manager to Lalla Muttra Pershaud, already mentioned, was in Gwalior on some temporary business, and I called on him, as an old friend, at a place in the Lashkar where he was residing. Among other subjects we discussed the ac-tion of the government in closing the mints, and I asked his opinion about the possibility of a gold standard for India and mentioned  8:45 mm • 4:35 pm • 4:35 pm • 3:10 pm of a gold standard for India, and mentioned the fact that certain members of the Cur-rency association considered that 550,000,000 of gold would be sufficient to provide India • 8:50 am CHICAGO, ST. PAUL, MINNE-apolis & Omaha Raliway-General Offices, Nebraska Di-vision, Fifteenth and Webster Streets, City Ticket Office, Itol Farnam Street, Telephone phone 1155. of gold would be sumctent to provide that with a currency. The lalls laughed the idea to scorn, and assured me that i50,000,000 would not suffice to replace the silver hoards of even one state. "You know," he said, "how anxious the late Maharajah Scindla was to get back the fortress of Gwallor, but year, few know the real cause prompting him. was to get tack the forthess of dwalfs, but very few know the real cause prompting him. That was a concealed hoard of sixty crores ($80,000,000) of rupees in certain vaults within the forthess, over which British sentinels had been walking for about thirty years, never suspecting the wealth concealed below their feet. Long before the British be brought, out and replaced by gold directly the government decread a gold currency for "Five fundred millices of gold would be absorbed and concealed before a gold curency had been twelve months in circula-tion. Europeans, even those who have been in the country for years, have no idea of the hoarding propensities of even well-to-do had used in the properties of the more wealthy bankers and tradets. For example, my wile," said the lalia, "has more than three lakhs of rupees hidden for far of my dying before her, because I am much older than che is, and we have co son alive to inherit my property. And I know nothing about the place where this money is concealed." On this I asked how natives managed to

On this I asked how natives mnnaged to accumulate so much wealth, and the lalla replied. "Natives don't spend like Euro-peans. Take the house of any well-to-do native merchant with an income of, say, 1,090 rupees per month; at the very outside 50 to 100 rupees would purchase the whole of the furniture in it. Beyond a few purdahs (curtains) and beds, furniture in the Euro-pean sense does not exist. Even the very wealthy, although they may have a carriare wealthy, although they may have a carriage and horacs, possess neither books nor pic-tures, nor any expensive works of art, and when a feast is given to their friends a piece of a plantain leaf serves each gues for a dish, where Europeans spend hundreds of rupees in dinner and breakfast services of fragile, but most expensive, china and glassware. All this the native saves and hoardo. The wealthy conceal their accumu-lations of gold and sliver in secret vaults, except the orngments which are reserved for and worn by their women." I had to admit the force of all this reasoning. The Trooperesses.

The Trooperesses. Cleveland Plain Dealer: She ha'ted her cavairy squad on the brow of the hill. Raising her pince nez she ran her keen gray eye over the command. "At-ten-saion!" she shouted. Her brow clouded. "Don't giggle." she harsbly cried. Then she briskly added: "Hats straight!" Fifty gauniteted hands arose in union. "Draw hat pins!" Fifty steel lances flashed in air! "Char-r-rge!"

And the squad swept down the hill.

Susan-Lor, Miss Ella, I wonder you've the 'eart to play, and you just in your blacks for your poor uncle. Miss Ella-Don't be silly, Susan! Can't you see I'm only playing on the notes! who knew the entrance into the concealed who ard was dead, except one man, who was extremely old, and, although in good health, he might have died any day. If that had happened the treasure might have been lost PROOF OF DOUBLE DEALINGS. From Fliegende Blaetter to the owner forever and the world for ages, ecause there was only one entrance to the hoard, which was most cunningly concealed. and, except that entrance, every other part was surrounded by solid rock. "So the maharajah was in such a fix that he must either get back his fortress or divulge the secret to the government and run the risk of losing the treasure forever. When the fortress was given back to the mahara-jah, and before the British troops had left Gwallor territory, masons were brought from Benares, sworn to secrecy in the temple of the Holy Cow, before leaving; and when they reached the Gwallor railway station they were put into carriages, blindfolded and driven to the place where they had to work. There they were kept till they had opened out the entrance into the secret vault, and, when the concealed hoard had been verified, and the hole built up again, they were once more blindfolded, put into carriages and taken back to the railway station and rebooked for Benares under a proper escort." Chowringhee Lalla went on to tell me that for generations before the rise of the British Private Snipps (as he compares h is half of a sausage given him by his fancee with another piece)-Great Heavens! I feared that my Katle was power his ancestors had held the post of treasurer in the Gwallor state, and that, after untrue to me. Now I know it. These two pieces fit. the British had annexed territories around Delhi, one of his great-grand uncles had retired from the post of treasurer of Gwallor with a fortune of twenty crores of rupees THE MOUJIK. From Scraps. (i20,000,000). By great good fortune, all this money was quietly got into British territory, he declared; and fifteen erores of it are at this day bricked up in a secret vault under a Hindu temple dedicated to the goddess of wealth in the holy city of Brindabur, "Now," said the Lalla, "If the treasurer could accu-mulate so much, what were the accumula-tions of the state likely to be? The treasures of Gwallor form but a very small amount compared with the total of the known con-cealed wealth of India. All the silver would
