IMPROVING OMAHA STREETS

Great Local Activity in Paving Follows the Return of Prosperity.

MILES OF NEW ASPHALT TO BE PUT DOWN

Work Already Commenced on Some of the Most Extensive Contracts, and the Preliminaries to Others Have All Been Settled.

The continual rains have put a temporary stop on paving operations, but with the advent of settled clear weather the contractors are ready to begin work in earnest and the members of the Board of Public Works expect that within another week asphalt will be going into the streets in half a dozen different places. The paving bonds that were issued last month are still held by the city. Hayes & Sons of Chicago have until next Tuesday to take the bonds and pay for them, otherwise the bonds will be turned over to the paving contractors who have signified their willingness to take them at par. The contractors will go ahead with their work as though the bonds had been sold, the estimates will be allowed as usual and the warrants turned over. The only difference will be that instead of redeeming the warrants in cash the city treasurer will issue bonds to the amount of the warrants and the contractors will hold the bonds until the war is over, and they can be disposed of at a reasonable figure. In this way the paving bill will not be delayed and it is believed that the contractors will be able to dispose of the bonds at a premium. In addition to these, there are a number of additional districts that have been more recently created and in which the pavement is practically assured as soon as the red tape procedure necessitated by the charter is completed. In a number of the districts in which the contracts have already been let the preliminary work has been considerably advanced and the asphalt can be laid at a rapid rate. The board is anxious to have as much work completed before the opening of the exposition as possible and particularly the streets in the vicinity of the exposition grounds. In any case there will be enough paving in progress this summer to give exposition visitors a very effective object lesson to the effect that Omaha is very much alive aside from the enterprise that may be incidental to the big show.

Work Already Provided For.

The aggregate amount of paving that is to be done this year is somewhat extraordinary. The districts have been created during the winter and contracts have accumulated until there is work enough ahead to keep things on the boom during the entire season. One or two small districts have already been paved with brick, but the bulk of the pavement that will be laid this year is asphalt, which the city authorities consider the most ornamental and durable material that can be used under ordinary conditions. The prices range from $1.15 to $1.24 per yard, the lowest for which any considerable amount of asphalt has ever been laid in any city.

BAR'S TRIBUTE TO ITS DEAD

General Memorial Meeting is Held in the Main Court Room.

WREATHS OF WORDS LAID ON BIER

Eloquent Harbisters Speak Feelingly of the Late Attorneys Adams, Lane and Hawes, Who Have Died but Recently.

The large court room in the court house was crowded with attorneys of the Douglas county bar, who met to pay their last tribute to the memory of the late E. C. Lane, Ben S. Adams and Patrick O. Hawes, all of whom died within the last few days. The meeting was presided over by Judges Slabaugh, Fawcett and Dickinson. The committees appointed to draft resolutions reported and the reports were ordered spread upon the records of the court and copies ordered sent to the families of the deceased. In reporting upon the death of E. C. Lane, R. B. Montgomery pronounced an eloquent eulogy, saying that he had known the deceased personally for a number of years. He had known him as a loving husband and a kind father—a man who was upright and of sterling honesty. T. J. Nolan of the committee appointed to report resolutions on the death of Ben S. Adams said that in the death of Mr. Adams the bar had lost a valuable member and the state had lost its most respected citizen. Lee S. Estelle, chairman of the committee assigned the duty of presenting resolutions on the death of Patrick O. Hawes, said that he had known the deceased for more than twenty-six years and that during that time the acquaintance had grown until it had become one of the warmest friendships. Patrick O. Hawes was described as a man of unquestioned honesty, generous and always willing to help a friend with either advice or money. He was described as a man who always possessed the courage of his convictions and always prepared to advocate the cause that he believed was right, even if the whole world was against him.

Three Good Citizens.

T. L. O'Donnell said that he knew all three of the attorneys very well and that in their death the country had lost three good citizens and the bar three bright members. Regarding Patrick O. Hawes, the speaker said that he regarded him as one of the country's noblemen, a man against whose integrity and honesty not a word could be said. T. J. Mahoney, in speaking of the death of the three attorneys, said that he knew all of them very well. They were all modest and unassuming and made no boasts of their work. Mr. Mahoney said that he knew Ben S. Adams first when he was young man located in Stuart, Ia., where he was an editor and also a practicing attorney. There he was respected by both young and old. That acquaintance had ripened with years. The deceased was a loving husband and one of the kindest of fathers. Mr. Mahoney declared that the world was better for the life and the work of Ben S. Adams.
