SALESMAN GETS A SHOCK.

Inquisitive Parrot's Remarks Cause Him Much Grief. The typical spinster who is the proprietor of a north side family hotel prizes her parrot very highly, relates the Chicago Chronicle, but a few days ago she was terribly shocked by an incident in which the parrot played the principal role. Among the regular guests at the hotel is a traveling salesman who manges to get in off the road for a few days each month and always stays at the spinster's hotel. The last time he came in it happened that every room in the house was taken. But the clerk informed the guest that by evening of the same day he would probably have a room vacant such as he desired. The traveling man, just in from a long trip, insisted that he needed a room at once, that he wanted a bath and a shave and had to have both without delay, and therefore must have a room of some After a consultation with the proprietor deavor to find a vacant room or some hopes of one, it was arranged that the traveling man should occupy the landlady's room until such time as he got his shave and bath and that perhaps by that time a room could

This was entirely satisfactory to the traveling man, and he started for the landlady's com carrying one satchel, while the porter into the room, dropped the things on the floor and the porter walked out. The traveling man looked around surveying the room and about the first thing that caught his eye was the parrot in a big cage overhanging the bay window. At the same time Polly caught sight of the strange visitor, and being used to no one in that room but the maiden lady apparently suffered a severe shock. Polly recovered in a moment, how-* 4:25 pm * 6:40 am ever, and looking down on the intruder with a quizzical, hypercritical air that also carried astonishment with it. the traveling man when the matter was reported to her, and she is trying to find out now where Polly learned such language and manners. The traveling man gave up the
