envious in view of the increasing power of the United States, but simply because too operous conditions on the part of America would make peace difficult. In fact, it deserves to be pointed out that France does not make any objection to the United States increasing either its strength or its ominions. The reason for the quiet feeling of France in this matter is that it is convinced that if such an increase in any way threatens any European power France is not that power. Even the annexation of some other point. By direction of the sec-

Hawaii, which gives to the United States an important possession in the Pacific, has not disturbed France in the slightest degree, its possessions in America being small and unimportant, consisting of some little islands and French Guiana. Therefore France feels sure that the Americans, whom it considers to be a practical people, will never think of having trouble with a great European power for such a trifling object. "As to the Philippines, if those islands re to be lost to Spain, France, as the ruler of Indo-China, would probably prefer having the Americans as next-door neighbors, instead of any European or Asiatic power. Consequently what France wants, to far as the United States is concerned, is only a proper consideration of its commercial interests. holds the regent in especial personal esteem. The statement that peace negotiations will be transferred to London finds no confirmation at the American embassy, while I can state on the authority of a leading diplomatist recently at the Spanish ministry in Washington that he has heard nothing to indicate that a peace treaty will be negotiated here. The view universally prevalent here in political and diplomatic circles is that the disposal of the Philippines is the real crux of the situation, constituting an obstacle very difficult to surmount. The expectation is that Washington diplomacy will find some method of leaving the Philippines question open for future decision and that peace will be concluded irrespective of it. The hope is strongly expressed in the Par liamentary lobby that the United States will at any rate take adequate precautions to prevent any other power from getting a foothold in the Philippines should the American cabinet decide against their retention tem porarily or otherwise, and they are returned to Spain under guarantees for their reformed government.
