After the opening of the exposition they moved up to Twenty-second and Manderson and after the woman found employment at the Idols of Art, they gave up oarding and indulged in light housekeeping. Some days ago Rev. Ely learned that his recreant wife was in Omaha and he came on, reaching here yesterday. He reported at the police station and said that he feared that things were not just right. The case was turned over to Captain Haze, who, with Major Llewellyn, commenced an investigation and soon succeeded in landing the parties and placing them under arrest. After the arrest Rev. Ely used some very strong language toward Reynolds, calling him names that would not be tolerated in good society or in the pulpit, but later on he cooled down and told his wife that she could continue upon her wayward course if she would surrender possession of the only child, a girl some 10 years of age, who has been with the mother. Mrs. Ely refused, and as she and Reynolds were carted away to jail. Ely laughed in glee as he tauntingly remarked: "You had your good time, and I am having mine
