FIVE STEPS IN THE RATIFICATION

ers Not Final.

About the first of December will be added to the collection of important international locuments in the State department at Washington the treaty of peace concluded between Spain and the United States at the suance of the aforesaid advice and consent 1st of October. This treaty will take rank in importance and interest with the treaties of the wars of 1776 and 1812 and the Mexican war. The action of the peace commission at Paris will not be final. The treaty on which they agree will be subject to ratification by both countries. According to the constitution and laws of the United States no treaty with this country is operative until it has gone through five stages, of which the negotiation and signing by the peace commissioners is only the first. When the peace commissioners have reached a determination the treaty as agreed to will be copied in duplicate, and each copy will be signed by all the commissioners. The copies will be made with the pen, for the typewriter is not recog-CORTLAND, N. Y. Aug. 27.—Marion the pen, for the typewriter is not recognized in diplomacy. In the Spanish copy the Spanish commissioners will sign first and in the American copy the Americans. The American copy will be brought back to this country by the secretary of the American commission and delivered to the secretary of state. In the State department a message for congress will be prepared. It will embody the text of the treaty. It will be written on heavy sheets of blue paper. fastened together at the top with red silk ribbon, the president will sign this message and Assistant Secretary Pruden will ake it to the capitol, where the senate, gathered in special session, will be waiting to receive it. When the message has been delivered to the senate the chairman of the committee on foreign relations will move an executive session, and behind closed doors the message will be read. It will probably follow the usual custom and be referred to the committee on foreign relations. When the senate adjourns it will be delivered to a confidential messenger from the government printing office, who will carry it to the public printer, and under his personal supervision it will be put into type by a special set of compositors. When the work is complete and about 100 copies have been run off the forms and proofs will be looked up in the vault. The copies will be delivered to the secretary of the senate, who will receipt for them, number each one and deliver them to the members of the senate.

Approval by the Senate. When the treaty has been approved (or its ratification"), a new copy will be made and returned to the president, with the signature of the president of the senate (the vice president of the United States), attested by the secretary of the senate. The president, on receipt of notice that the senate has given its consent, will ratify the treaty, and the State department will prepare what is known as an exchange copy. This is the copy which will be sent to Madrid, to be preserved there as the permanent record of the government between the countries. Spain also will prepare an exchange copy and send it to the United States.

The treaty, then complete, may be nclosed in a box, but it will probably be placed in a portfolio of green leather, embossed and stamped with a gold border.
