CITY CLAIMS SEVENTH STREET

Will Resist the Rock Island's Protectorate Over the Thoroughfare.

APPEALS TO THE SUPREME COURT

City Attorney Wadsworth Completes His Brief in the Case and Has It Ready for Filing at Once in Des Moines.

City Attorney Wadsworth has completed the preparation for his arguments in the appeal taken by the city from the decision of the district court in the injunction suit against the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway company to restrain the city from interfering with its possession of Seventh street. The papers will be filed with the supreme court in the course of the next few days for the October term.

The litigation between the Rock Island and the city of Council Bluffs of Seventh street, where the company's tracks cross at Fourteenth avenue, commenced several years ago and the present suit was handed down from the former administration. The Rock Island railway claims possession of Seventh street, where its numerous tracks cross between Fourteenth and Fourteenth avenues, and claims the right of the city to order it to lay planking between its rails or do anything else to make the thoroughfare passable to the public. The railway claims possession of the street on three grounds: First, that the street was never dedicated to the city; second, that it holds a deed for the land comprising the street from the late John T. Baldwin and others; third, that it has secured possession by prescription, or in other words, that the city has lost its rights by abandonment.

In 1891 the city ordered the street brought to grade and let the contract for the work. The railroad company at once brought injunction proceedings against the city to restrain it from doing any work on that portion occupied by its tracks. A compromise was effected at the time and the railroad company brought the portion occupied by its right of way up to grade as ordered by the city and withdrew the injunction suit. In 1895 the residents of that neighborhood made complaint to the city council and requested that the Rock Island company be compelled to plank between its tracks and make the street passable both for teams and foot passengers. In view of the agitation the company then commenced injunction proceedings against the city to restrain it from interfering with its possession of the street. The case was heard before Judge Green in the district court and resulted in favor of the railroad and the injunction sought was granted. From this the city took an appeal but it is only now that the papers in the appeal have been completed.

City Attorney Wadsworth in his argument insists that it had never been necessary for the city of Council Bluffs to take any action whatever for the opening of Sixth, Eighth or Ninth streets where crossed by the Rock Island's right-of-way and contends that the city has the right to occupy and use said streets where the same are crossed by the railroad's right-of-way it has for the same reason and with equal logic the right to Seventh street where the plaintiff's tracks cross the street. He contends that it is shown beyond all dispute that these streets are continuous through the same addition and the citizens of Council Bluffs have a right to occupy them for street purposes and, while it is plainly seen wherein the city has the right, it is not clear to see where the railroad in this case gets its right or authority to occupy said street under deeds which he alleges the Rock Island company itself does not recognize and which were not introduced in evidence by the railroad at the hearing in the district court and which were made years after said streets were platted and dedicated to the use of the public. As another argument in support of his position City Attorney Wadsworth sets up that the Rock Island recognized the fact that Seventh street was continuous across its right-of-way, as when the company built its freight house it built the same up to but not beyond the line of Seventh street.

The grape growers of Council Bluffs and vicinity at a meeting held yesterday afternoon at the headquarters of the Council Bluffs Grape Growers' Shipping association decided to make a special exhibit in the Pottawattamie wigwam at the exposition of the products of their vineyards on next Friday and Saturday. The meeting was presided over by Alex Wood, while W. L. Keeline acted as secretary, and was well attended by local representative fruit growers, who are taking much interest in the proposed exhibit of what is now generally conceded to be one of the most important industries in this locality. The hills and valleys east of the city contain thousands of acres of vineyards laden this year with the finest of the luscious fruit, and the exhibit promises to be an eyeopener to the visitors at the exposition next week. The exhibit next Friday and Saturday will be purely local affair, and is not in any way intended to conflict with "Grape day" at the exposition, which has been set for September 16, and on which day the members of the Grape Growers' Shipping association at a meeting held a couple of weeks ago decided to send a large quantity of the fruit for free distribution. The interest displayed at the meeting yesterday gives assurance that the exhibit next Friday and Saturday will be a success and a credit to the fruit growers of this section of the country. The following committee was selected to solicit fruit for the exhibit: Dan Smith, chairman; James Herold, J. P. Hess, W. S. Keeline and Freeman Meneray. The committee was instructed to invite all the members of the Council Bluffs Grape Growers' Shipping association to participate in the exhibit.
