He Was on the Mohegan.

The Union Pacific freight traffic department vesterday morning received a call that had a bit of novelty attached to it. A shipwrecked man called and presented a live stock contract that had been in the water with him off the coast of England for four hours. Notwithstanding its water soaking the document was in good condition and enabled the holder to obtain transportation from Omaha to Huntington, Ore., on the Oregon Short Line.

The man's name is Mannie Lester Smith, and he was nearly drowned when the steamer Mohegan was wrecked off St. Keverne, England, about the middle of Oc-He had taken a carload of horses from Huntington, Ore., to England, and was returning home when the wreck oc-Mr. Smith says he jumped overcurred. board with the captain, but the latter was never seen afterward. The former had on a life preserver and a small wheel from the cabin to help him struggle with the waves, while the captain had two life preservers on. The Oregon man says he first managed to swim to a rock and got a fair hold, only to be swept away from there by a big wave. At the same time he lost hold of his wheel, which was helping to support him, and then he thought he was gone. But he secured it again and after four hours of hard work succeeded in getting ashore two miles below the point where the vessel sank. Notwithstanding his hardship on this trip, Mr. Smith says he expects to take back another carload of Oregon horses to England as soon as he can get his stock together.
