UNDER THE FLAG.

A Pathetic and Significant Scene in the War Time of 35 Years Ago. I have seen the American flag in many countries and circumstances, says a writer in Youth's Companion. I have seen it floating at the head of a great war squadron. I once saw it carried, ragged and wet with blood, but triumphant, from a battlefield which was strewn with the corpses of men who had died to defend it. But nowhere has it seemed to me more touching and impressively used than in a homely little during the civil war. In August, 1863, I was going from West Virginia to Philadelphia through Pennsylvania. The southbound trains that summer were heavily loaded with troops and provisions for the army, but going back they carried few passengers. At Pittsburg, when the train rolled into the station, a great, silent crowd waited for it. A splendid funeral car stood in the scene of which I happened to be a witness background surrounded by troops and the street was filled by a long line of closed carriages. A volunteer officer in the union army, who had been a man of influence and high position in Pittsburg, had been killed in the last battle and now his native city mourned him and did him honor. The coffin, rich in decorations and covered with flowers, was reverently borns from the car. The troops presented arms; the standards, draped with black, were lowered and the air was filled with the solemn music of funeral marches. After a short delay the train rolled on. Late that afternoon it stopped at a little etation among the Alleghany mountains. The station house was but a rough shed; a pig was rooting under the platform. In the background was a squalld cabin in a potato patch. The whole landscape spoke of barrenness and helpless poverty.

noor country girl patched gown that clung limply to her thin body and a calico sunbonnet, which she had thrown back that she might better watch the train. A little barefooted boy clung to her, but she did not heed him. Her face was pinched and bloodless. She leaned forward, staring with childish, dilated eyes into each car as it passed. Arrive. There was a grating sound as the trainmen dragged a rough pine box from the freight car and laid it upon the platform.

Standing on the platform was a woman,

The woman went up to it, and, without a word or a tear, dropped down and clasped
