DREW A BEAD ON ROOSEVELT.

Crack Marksman of the Ninth Regulars Came Near Shooting.
Among the United States regulars whose erms of enlistment expired during the Santiago campaign and who quit the service upon returning to this country was a man of the Ninth infantry, known to the members of the regiment as Johnson of Maryland. He was a tall, lanky southerner and the pride of the Ninth, because of his marksmanship, which was so true that Johnson was head and shoulders over all the others in handling a Krag-Jorgensen. He ap-Uncle Sam's service and often spoke of reenlisting until an event occurred just after the close of the first day's fighting at San Juan, which caused him to change his mind, and he vowed never to handle a gun again. Its would never speak of it to his comrades, but they all knew why he quit, and although they argued and tried to persuade him to remain, Johnson only shook his head and said: "No, boys, I can't stay with you longer. I'd like to, but don't ask me again. I can't do it. I must get out."

One of the members of Johnson's company tells in the New York Sun the story of what caused the Ninth to lose its crack shot:

"We had been engaged in the hottest kind of work for some hours and after taking the first line of Spanish trenches we were fixing them up for our own use. The Span-lards had been driven back, but their sharpshooters were still at it, picking off our men here and there. The Mauser bullets were whizzing around us pretty lively and I noticed that Johnson was getting more and more impatient every minute and acting as if he was just aching to get at those Spanish sharpshooters and finally he turned to me and in his drawling tone said: "Say, it's tough we can't get a chance

"He soon got his chance, however, for just as dusk began our captain ordered a dozen of us to advance a short distance ahead and well beyond the trench our forces had captured. When we arrived on the spot we were halted on the edge of a dense wood. Just ahead of us was an open space of clear ground and on the other side of that a low, thick brush, which extended as far as I could see. Our little party of crack shots was one of several picked from the various regiments, and as near as I can recall there were men of the Third, Sixth and Ninth cavalry just to the right of us and some of the Seventh, Ninth and Tenth infantry on our left. Behind us, but well to the rear, were some of the Seventy-first New York, the Rough Riders and, I believe, the Sixth Massachusetts. There was an oc-casional shot exchanged, but otherwise things were getting quet. "Just before night came on we received our final orders, which were to pay particular attention to the brush just ahead of us on the other side of the clearing and to shoot at the first head we saw. We had settled down to our tiresome occupation of watching and waiting, but always prepared for anything, and Johnson and I were talking in low tones of the day's fighting we had just passed through when we heard the sound of a dry twig breaking. We were alert in an instant and all the men in our line were looking straight shead with pieces raised ready for use. As I looked at Johnson I could see him smile, apparently with the hope of a chance to shoot. The sound re-peated itself, this time a little nearer, but still quite indistinct. An instant later we again heard it and it sounded directly ahead of Johnson and me and was beyond a doubt a cautious tread, but too heavy for a man. While we waited in almost breathless silence for something to happen we again heard the cautious tread, now quite plain. It was the tread of a horse and was just ahead of us. Suddenly as the tread became plainer a dark object appeared just above the top of the brush. Dozens of guns were raised, but eaw him raise his gun, his fingers nervously working on the trigger. At that instant the

"My God, Ben Roosevelt! And I nearly "With this he threw his gun from him and just sat there and stared at the place in the brush where Colonel Roosevelt and his horse had entered. The latter, when straight up to us, and appeared surprised to find us so far beyond the trench. When he heard of the orders about shooting at the first head we saw he smiled and said:

ders. They were probably issued while I was away on a little reconnoitring on my "He spoke cheeringly to the men about and passed on, little thinking how near he more we thought of it after he passed the more in the dumps we got, for everyone of us loved the colonel of the Rough Riders, particularly for his kindness to his men, and I tell you it was a gloomy crowd that sat there watching Johnson, who, with his head supported by his hands, was either praying or thinking hard.

"We were relieved shortly afterward, and walked with bowed head and none of us spoke to him, for we imagined that he felt as if he would like to be alone. From that day Johnson showed a restlessness that was new to him, and I never saw him so happy as the day he stepped aboard the transport bound for home. "I don't know whether any word of the affair ever reached Colonel Roosevelt's ears, but it was a mighty narrow escape, and I tell you that I would rather have twenty-five Spaniards with a bead on me at 100 yards than for Johnson to pick me out for a target at 300 yards. In the first case you would have a good chance of escaping injury, but with Johnson shooting it was a clear case of cashing in your chips."

FORTIFIED MONASTERY. Where the Monks Showed Contempt for British Attacks.

For a country the ruler of which holds such emphatic views on the subject of universal peace, Russia holds the strongest fortified institution in the world. It is the monastery of Solovetsk and if any military experts desire points as to the best method of protecting vital spots they can do no better than pay a visit to this abode of monks and take a few lessons in practical defense from the practical brethren who live there.
