WHEN DEWEY WAS ILL.

at One Time. "I was in intimate relation with Admiral lewey for eight or ten months and I never heard him once mention politics. Therefore I have no sort of knowledge as to the admiral's political views or inclinations. Broadly speaking, politics is never discussed by the officers on board American war ships. The navy has no politics. Its business and sole purpose is to do the work assigned to it as one arm of the national

"So spoke Mr. Thomas W. Worthington of Birmingham, Ala., to an Age-Herald reporter. Mr. Worthington graduated from Annapolis in 1882 and was assigned to the Juniata, commanded by Dewey, who at that time held the rank of commander in the navy. Mr. Worthington was at that time an ensign and was a flag officer for Dewey. He resigned from the navy to engage in private business, but retains some extremely interesting impressions of the now famous admiral. He is very reluctant to speak of these matters, but his friends managed in some way to draw him out privately yester-

while in command of the Juniata early in 1883." said Mr. Worthington. "The ship sailed for the far east on the long course. Commander Dewey's health was bad and got ery much worse after we sailed from the United States. We got into Fayal, in the Azores, and lay there for a month. The commander was extremely ill and the ship's surgeon couldn't tell what was the matter with him. The commander himself couldn't tell. Nobody knew. Doctors invited on board were no wiser than the rest of us. Finally Dewey gave orders for the ship to sail for Gibraltar. Arrived there, our surgeon went ashore and got two army surgeons of the British garrison to come off to the ship and consult with him regarding the commander's condition. They failed to discover the cause of the patient's suffering. We remained at Gibraltar for a time and proceeded from there to Malta. At Malta it was decided to take Commander Dewey to the hospital. It was there discovered by one of the doctors that the commander was suffering from abscess of the liver.

but the doctors informed the sufferer that the chances were greatly against his recovery. Dewey made his will and prepared for death. He dictated to me letters to members of his family and they were mailed. I also, under his instructions, drew up a detailed statement as to his private affairs, so that there might be no necessary trouble the operation and, of course, the use of the knife made the patient weaker than ever. Those who assisted in the painful work became convinced afterwards that Dewey could not long survive, and they told him so. He received the statement calmly and completed his arrangements for passing out. We stayed there a month, during which time I attended Dewey in the hospital. He showed no signs of recovery and so finally we had to leave him, expecting never to see him again. We sailed for the east and spent a year or two in Chinese waters. The next time I heard of my old commander he was in charge of another ship."

"A surgical operation was decided upon

Comparative Value of Fish and Other Foods Determined by Experiments-One Fish Story

Ruthlessly Shuttered.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8 .- (Correspondence of The Bee.)-The use of fish as food is a usiom probably as old as the human race. The facts and porions about the nutritive value of fish are numerous. At this time, any edible product, anything bearing upon the use of fish in the diet is welcomed by the public. Farmers' Bulletin No. 85, entitled "Fish as Food," just issued by the Department of Agriculture, by Dr. C. F. Langworthy, treats on this subject from the economic as well as the nutritive standpoint

Fish in one form or another is almost miversally recognized as one of the important food materials, and enters, greater or less extent, into the diet of very many if not most American families. Of the very large quantity of fish annually placed on the market, the greater part is consumed at home, although a portion is prepared in various ways for export. Some idea of the fishery industry of our country OMAHA & ST. LOUIS > processes of canning, salting and smoking. Fresh and Salt Water Fish. We find in this bulletin that there is no difference in the nutritive value of fresh water and salt water fish. In general it may be said that those taken from clear, cold or deep water are preferable to those from shallow or warm water, while those taken in waters with a rocky or sandy bottom are more desirable than those from streams

> The mode of capture affects the market somewhat. Fish caught by the gills and allowed to die in the water by slow degrees, as is the case where gill nets are used, undergo decomposition very readily and are inferior for food. Fish are often landed alive and allowed to die slowly. This custom is not only inhuman, but lessens the value of the fish. It has been found that fish killed immediately after catching remain firm and bear shipment better than those allowed to die slowly. The quality of the fish is often injured by improper handling in the fish boats before placing on the market. Improvement in chilling apparatus and in other lines have made it possible to bring fish to market from distant fishing > grounds in good condition. Fish contain the same kind or nutrients as other food materials. A table of analysis of a large number of fish shows that fish is a respect resembles meat. Neither fish nor meat is a source of carbohydrates. Fish meat; but some kinds of fish have much more fat than other kinds. Butterfish, for instance, has 7.2 per cent; herring, 5.9; Spanish mackerel, 7.2; California salmon, 17; Maine salmon, 9.5, and turbot, 8.7; while sea bass, cod, pickerel, red grouper and tom cod, with 0.2 per cent, cusk with 0.1, and Digestibility of Fish. A number of experiments have been made with men to learn how thoroughly fish is digested and to compare it in this respect with other foods. It was found that fish and lean beef were about equally digestible. In each case about 95 per cent of the total dry matter, 97 per eent of the protein and over 90 per cent of the fat were retained by the body. Other experiments indicate that salt fish is less thoroughly digested than fresh fish. The leaner kinds of fish are more easily digested than the fatter kinds. It should be remembered, however, that persons differ in respect to the action of foods in the digestive apparatus; and fish, like

The chief uses of fish as food are to furnish an economical source of nitrogenous nutrients and to supply the demand for variety in the diet, which increases as civilization advances.

There is a widespread notion that fish contains large proportions of phosphorus, and on that account is particularly valuable as brain food. The percentage of phosphorus in specimens thus far analyzed is not larger than is found in the flesh of other animals used for food. But, even if the flesh were richer in phosphorus, there is no experimental evidence to warrant the assumption that fish is more valuable than meats or

The opinion of eminent physiologists is that phosphorus is no more essential to the brain than nitrogen, potassium or any other element which occurs in its tissues. The value commonly attributed to the phosphorus is based on a popular misconception of statements by one of the early writers on such topics. In discussing the belief that fish contain certain elements which are adapted in a special manner to renovate the brain and so to support mental labor," a prominent physiologist says: "There is no
