spend it in riotous living, the vast majority deceive themselves into thinking that the money is only borrowed temporarily. They believe they can gain more by using the sum abstracted and then "make it good." Perhaps the ease with which they escaped detection in the first case leads them into the second. This kind of morality begets habits of a similar character and part of the money is spent in dissipations, but always in the hope that they will be able to make it good by some lucky accident. The falling off of the totals of embezzlements for the past year is taken to indicate that the world is progressing and becoming wiser and better, but inasmuch as the decrease was 60 per cent in a single year and that the world's experience has been that the advance to higher planes of intelligence and morality is very slow at best, little comfort is found in this idea.

Sheridan's Dispatch Bearer Dead. A historical character passed away with the burial of Pollard Brown at Kakamo, Ind., on the 4th Inst. He was a veteran of the Mexican war and served four years in discovered in the millions, four more than the war of the rebellion. He was a mounted orderly on the staff of General Sheridan and attended the dashing cavalry leader as message and dispatch bearer throughout the Virginia campaign. In the struggles up and down the Shenandoah valley Brown was ascontrast to the number of reported failures signed the duty of carrying the most important dispatches, and he went willingly on the most daring and perilous journeys. On these trips "Old Bob," his horse, was several times wounded, but always kept his feet and landed his master safely within the union

When the war ended Brown mounted "Old Bob" and rode home, where the veteran war horse was made a pensioner of the Brown farm, three miles east of Kakomo. The battle-scarred animal died only five years ago at the age of 39 years. When "Old Bob" died a grave was dug on the lawn of the Brown homestead and the horse was buried with all the honors of war, the Minister—Study, 1621 Cass street. Services
