Who Have 12,000 Relatives. The most remarkable family in point of runs things in the Cumberland mountains of Kentucky-in Letcher county, to be exact Webb is the name of these old persons, whose number is six, and to whom every individual of the 12,000 population of the county is directly or indirectly related. Three old men there are, and three old women. Their father was the first cousin of Daniel Boone, and was, in addition, the earliest settler in the rugged mountain region in which his descendants are now all

They are all called by their given names, with the prefix "Uncle" or "Aunt," as the comes first by reason of her age, which is 89 years. She is growing rather appreciative of the burdens which come with advanced years, and she is not so spry as she has Then, too, been up to a few years ago. the murder of her son, Wiley W. Craft, a returned to Ludlow street jail, where he died dozen years ago, has had much to do with aging her. To Archibald Craft, her hus-band, she presented eleven pledges. Her grandchildren number ninety, her greatgrandchildren sixty, and her great-great-her son. She married a man named Adams, and ten children were born. It was to visit $8,091, and he will take steps to collect that her eldest daughter that Aunt Polly last year rode 100 miles on horseback over the roughest of mountain roads. She didn't mind this experience, so unusual for an octogenarian, and remarked that the Webbs came of hardy stock. She has 110 grandchildren, seventy great-grandchildren and about forty great-great-grandchildren. Jason is next in point of years, being 80 and the most prolific of the family. He doesn't know the meaning of illness from any personal knowledge of it, and he says he feels as fine as a yearling. Nineteen children is the record which makes him the proudest man in Letcher county. nineteen have obeyed the scriptural injunction and have multiplied to such an extent that the old gentleman has 175 grandchildren, 150 great-grandchildren and more than 100 great-grandchildren. Aunt Sally, with 75 milestones to credit, runs around her home with as much agility as any of her grandchildren. She is a widow and does her own work, even to shouldering a sack of corn and carrying it to the mill. She has thirteen children eighty grandchildren, sixty-five great-grandchildren, and more than fifty great-great-

The baby of the family is Uncle Wiley, who is only 73. His eleven children perpetuated the race to the extent of seventyfive grandchildren, and he has fifty great-grandchildren and thirty great-great-grandchildren. He apologizes for his comparatively small number of descendants by stating that his sons married late in life.

RECOLLECTIONS OF TWEED.

Death of the Ship Captain Who Carried the Boss to Cuba. The recent death of James Bryant, a ship captain, in New York, recalls the events of William M. Tweed's career, which was without example or parallel in municipal rascality. Tweed was the son of a mechanic in New York city, relates the Chicago Chronicle, and learned a trade himself, which he followed in his youth. He was able and ambitious; became popular with the rough classes; was foreman of an engine company before a paid fire department was organized, and became a political leader. In 1853, when he was 30 years old, he was elected alderman. He afterward served a term in congress, but appreciated the superior advantages of power in local offices. He was chosen supervisor in New York and was chairman of the beard. He was also on the school board and was deputy street commissioner. In these positions he formed vast plans of municipal robbery, which he carried into effect. He was appointed commissioner of public works and commissioner of public works and commissioner of public works and appointed commissioner of public works and appointed commissioner of public works and which he followed in his youth. He was appointed commissioner of public works and this provided the opportunity for his enor-

He devised public improvements of a magnificent character. Streets, boulevards and parks were laid out in all directions. His associates were informed in advance of lands to be bought by the city and secured options on the tracts. These tracts were then sold to the city at four, five and ten times the amount they had cost, Tweed and his associates pocketing the profits. The construction of a city hall was commenced and bills to the amount of $10,000,000 were audited and paid on construction account. The entire building could have been completed for $3,000,000. Furnishing and carall ...a 4:50 pm all:30 am peting the structure cost as much more. the good he had accomplished." But Tweed's contemporaries did not see it that way. October 28, 1871, he was arrested on a civil suit brought by Charles O'Conor, the leader of the New York bar, supported by Samuel J. Tilden, as taxpayers in behalf of the city. He was held to bail in the sum of $1,000,000, which he immediately furnished. In November he was elected to the state senate, but he never took his December he was arrested and indicted for fraud. On the first trial the jury disagreed, but on the second trial he was convicted on twelve counts of the indictment and sentenced to a year's imprisonment on each count. This was a "cumulative" sentence, which was set aside as unlawful. In April, 1875, an action was commenced against him on the part of the city for the recovery of $6,000,000 alleged to have been stolen from the city treasury and he was held to bail in $3,000,000. Unable to furnish the bail he was sent to Ludlow street jail. After remaining there awhile he obtained permission to visit his home in charge of a bailiff and retired to bathe and dress. He slipped out of doors and escaped from custody. Several of Tweed's accomplices, including City Chamberlain Sweeney, City Comptroller Connolly, Mayor Oakley Hall and some of the swindling contractors fled to Europe, where some of them died. Others returned within the last few years, aged and broken down, but rich. Mayor Hall's case was different from that of the other officials. Doubtless he had no share of Tweed's plunder and he came back from England poor. He died last year. When he was elected in 1869 he said that he would rather be mayor of New York than president of the United States. He was implicated in the Tweed robberies through his inefficiency and negect to prevent them, not as an accessory. him in charge Tweed made his way to the harbor and was put aboard the schooner Frank Atwood, of which James Bryant (who dled recently) was captain. The vescel sailed for Santiago, Cuba, where Tweed left it and remained some time, his whereabouts being unknown to the New York authorities. Leaving Santiago in a sailing vessel, he landed at a small seaport in Spain, where he remained some time in obscurity. Local curiosity was at last excited, the Spanish police were notified, he was arrested and at length was identified as the man known throughout the world for his colossal municipal robberies and a fugitive from justice. At that time there was no treaty of extradition with Spain, which was the reason of his seeking refuge there. But that government corresponded with the American State department and offered to surrender Tweed a mark of distinguished international courtesy and Tweed was deported to the United States. On his arrival in New York he was
