HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

A war story told by a comedian of a New York theater was recounted last night in the corridor of a hotel, by an eastern traveling man, as illustrating native Nebraska dignitaries.

It concerned a private in the First Nebraska regiment in the Philippines. This private was not of a bloodthirsty disposition, and he did not look forward to the approaching engagement.

The commanding officer of the company was a careful man, with a rather unusual regard for the government stores. A few hours before the attack was begun he called before him his company commander.

The private seemed interested. When the captain finished his brief oration he asked: "Will the Philippines pick their men, also, captain?"

"Then," announced the Nebraska soldier, "I'd like to go out now and take my pick, and talk it over with him. Perhaps we can compromise this thing somehow."

Wednesday night three little pickaninnies were playing barefooted in the light snow on a Capitol avenue sidewalk near Eleventh street.

A philanthropic man was taken aback by the "No shoes" sign when he saw the children on the threshold of an adjacent house and shouted: "Get in his house and put on your shoes this minute!"

The philanthropic man was touched. Reaching his hand into his pocket, he was about to give to the mother enough cash to buy shoes for the children.
