SPAIN'S NOTED REPUBLICAN

Dramatic Career and Personal Reminiscences of the Late Senor Castelar.

FAMOUS ORATOR, WRITER AND STATESMAN

Novelist at 17, Professor at 25, Editor at 32, President of Spain at 41—His Conduct in the Virginia Affair.

There is probably no man in this country so well qualified to describe the character and personality of Senor Castelar, the dead leader of the republican party in Spain, as Dr. Henry M. Field. A personal acquaintance begun many years ago was kept up by a long correspondence. Dr. Field loved the great Spaniard as a man and admired him as a statesman. He regards Castelar as one of the great men of the generation and says of him: "My acquaintance with Castelar began after his second return to Spain, when he was a member of the Cortes from Madrid. My first view of him was disappointing and he had not the grand figure which we are accustomed to associate with a grand orator. He was short, thick set, and broad-shouldered, with the neck and breast of a bull. He was bald and his dome-like head seemed massive in its proportions. His voice was low and pleasant, his manners deliberate. "This was the orator in repose, but when stirred to the depths of feeling in a great speech he made a different impression. I heard him make such a speech in December, 1884, after the revolt of that year, of which he had disapproved. He had been accused by the monarchists of supporting the rebellion and by his own associates of lukewarmness in failing to support it. He made this speech to explain his position. "I shall never forget the impression he made then. As the fire kindled within him his voice rose. The words came faster and faster till the stream became a torrent and the breeze swelled to the war of a tempest. His gestures answered to his voice, his right arm quivering as though with electricity pointed wherever he would that the lightning should strike. He would clasp his hands or double his fists, raise them above his head and then throw them violently out in front of him as though he had taken a red-hot ball out of his fiery brain to dash it in the face of his enemies. "His oratory was not all thunder and lightning. There were flashes of wit, touches of pathos and strains of humor. With the hand of a master he touched every note in the scale of human feeling. I understood Spanish, but imperfectly, yet I was never more moved by any speech in my life. It was impossible not to feel the power and enthusiasm of the man behind the words. It was a human voice that thrilled us as well as a human voice that thrilled us. "As a talker Castelar was no less gifted than as a speaker. He was one of the most brilliant conversationalists I ever met and I recall many pleasant hours passed in his very modest Madrid house when he ran on from one subject to another—books, art, music, literature, history, men, nations—every topic that can attract the intellectual man. "Advocate of Liberty. "The first time I met him he spoke in eloquent terms of his admiration for our own country. From this the talk ranged naturally to the cause of liberty and its advancement in all parts of the world. As he talked on and on he became more enthusiastic and kept moving closer to me as we sat together on a divan, and finally he took hold of the lapel of my coat, at the climax of some point he had been leading up to, and shook me violently as though to force the truth home to me in such a way that I could never forget it. "Similarly in walking along the street I have known him to pause and deliver a regular speech, with all the inflections and gestures that he employed in the chamber. It was simply the innate enthusiasm of the man which carried him entirely out of himself. That was the basis of his wonderful power as an orator. "Castelar was born at Cadix in 1832. He came naturally by his liberal principles. His father had been forced to leave the country to escape a sentence of death for participating in liberal movements. Like Canovas, Sagasta and Costello, this youth, who was to become the tribune of the people, had to make his own way in the world. He early displayed his intellectual powers, and by the time he was 18 had written two novels. Then, with what assistance his relatives were able to give him and his own earnings from journalistic writing, he was able to go to the University of Madrid. "The young man prepared himself for an educational career. Soon after he had finished his work as a student an examination was held to fill the professorship of history and philosophy in the university. He carried off the prize over the heads of all his older competitors and became a full-fledged professor in one of the oldest universities in Europe at the age of 25. "Like almost every change in his career, Castelar's first appearance in public life was made under dramatic circumstances. He had gone to attend a liberal meeting in the Theater del Oriente. At that time he had never made a speech in his life, did not know that he could make one. But, as the meeting progressed, he became so excited that he rushed to the tribune and delivered an address which sent the audience wild with enthusiasm. "That event made Castelar a well known man, and, more important, it revealed him to himself. It led to his employment on the most important liberal paper in Madrid. Two years later he founded a paper of his own, La Democracia. "By his speeches and writings Castelar helped to bring about the revolution of 1868. When that failed his paper was suppressed and he was condemned to death. He received warning, however, in time to escape into Switzerland. Two years later he returned to become the leader of the republican party. "Two other young leaders who have since played important parts in their country's history were included under the same banner with Castelar. They were Sagasta and Martos. In one of the most powerful speeches he ever made I heard Castelar refer to this fact, and he pointed out as showing the progress of liberal principles that Senor Sagasta was at that moment the prime minister of the country. "Castelar became president when the republic was already doomed. If any man could have saved it he would have done so. He did save the country from civil and foreign war and prevented it from being torn to pieces before he was a second time driven into exile by the placing of Alfonso XII on the throne. "Though Castelar was a thorough-going republican, he was never a plotter or extremist. He would never consent to turn his country's difficulties to party advantage. There was an example of this in the recent war. Twenty thousand republicans signed an address pledging him their support if he would declare a republic. Castelar's answer was to go into the Cortes and take the oath among the monarchists. "Castelar's studies as well as his earlier experience had convinced him that no republic could stand until the people had mastered the principles of liberty and freedom. As he said to me once, he believed that the republic would come, not only in Spain, but all over Europe. "But, he added, "Americans especially may join with the people of Spain in mourning the loss of the great statesman. For American institutions and for the American people Castelar always had the greatest regard and warmest admiration. He spoke of it as the 'great country,' 'the land of freedom,' 'the champion of peace.' He was one of the best informed men in Europe on the history of institutions of the United States. I have heard him speak with a great longing, as though it was one of the dreams of his life, of his wish to visit our country and to see for himself and face to face the people who had wrought out such a great work in the western continent. "Once in his life Castelar was instrumental in averting war between his country and the United States. That was in 1874, when he was president of Spain and minister of foreign affairs. The ship Virginia was taken off the coast of Cuba while conveying a party of American filibusters to the island. Some of these were summarily executed by the Spanish authorities. Those of us who afternoon, and again sent word to know if the jury were likely to agree. Again the attorney answered came back. "Supper time came, and no jury. General Sikes, the American minister to Spain, was ready to demand his passports. "In Spain the feeling was scarcely less intense. The Americans had been caught in an attempt to aid the Cuban insurgents and there was a popular demand that they should suffer for it. Every one of Castelar's ministers held this attitude, but neither clamor nor influence caused him to lose his head. He promptly disavowed the act of the Spanish commander and ordered that full reparation be made. This act, coming at a critical moment and having popular approval, entitled Castelar to recognition as a deserving statesman who had his country's welfare, rather than his own popularity, at heart. "Castelar was a statesman in all his acts, in nothing the demagogue. He loved liberty and desired it, not for his country alone, but for the oppressed of every land and clime. His mind was broad, his motives pure and his character upright. After a life spent in the public service and having had at one time all the resources of the government in his hands he died a poor man. "Backlist's Arsenic Pills. A correspondent of Law Notes, writing from Virginia, gives us the following jury story: In a prosecution for horse stealing tried in Bedford county, Va., just after the war, the evidence was conflicting, and, as usual, the attorney for the prisoner obtained from the court an instruction that the prisoner was entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt. The jury retired, and after they had been out about two hours the dinner hour arrived. The judge sent the sheriff to ask if the jury were likely to agree. The answer came, "Yes." The court waited until 3 o'clock in the

convey a very clear impression without being quite definite. Attorney—You say you saw the shoes first? Witness—Yes, sir. Attorney—How near were you to the scene of the affair? Witness—When the first shot was fired, ten feet from the shooter. Attorney—Ten feet. Well, now, tell the court where you were when the second shot was fired. Witness—I didn't measure the distance. Attorney—Speaking approximately, how far should you say? Witness—Well, it approximated to half a mile. So many people honestly believe there is no cure for rheumatism, that one of our well known druggists will give away free a trial package of Gloria Tonic and let the sufferer make a good, fair test of the remedy. They would like to meet the hardened skeptics who have "tried everything and failed." The free trial will assure such sufferers that a remedy has been discovered that cures so-called hopeless cases. Gloria Tonic cured an old gentleman at Lyon, Mo., at the age of 82, after having suffered for 42 years. This famous remedy is sold at $1.00 a package or 50c for trial packages for $3.50. Even the free trial will give you relief and a cure is certain to follow. The name of the remedy, Gloria Tonic is suggestive of the glorious relief it brings and is endorsed by physicians. "Possibly 50 samples will be given to children or anyone else that is not an actual sufferer from rheumatism. The free packages are being given away by Kuhn & Co., 15th and Douglas Streets,
