Albert Elliott and Fred Ray, accused of grand larceny by L. S. Carpenter, were discharged on motion of Deputy County Attorney Heisley. Mr. Carpenter alleged the loss of a lot of chean lewelry valued at $72.30. He was unable to prove its value and the evidence showed the Elliott had

RELIC OF THE BOOM DAYS

Reminiscences of a Pioneer Town and the Hopes of Its Founders.

OF WYOMING THAT

Flourished in the Fifties, Withered, and Passed from Sight-Fragments of Its History Preserved.

Among the relics of pioneer days in J. Sterling Morton's collection is a fragmentary file of the Wyoming Telescope for 1857 and 1859. Wyoming was a Nebraska town with high hopes and great expectations in the early times. Just what the expectations were and how far they were realized is told in the Conservative, as follows:

"Those were the days when prosperity was in the air, in a special sense; men knew that a metropolis, of which their imaginations made a second London at the least, must soon begin to materialize somewhere on the Missouri river, and as sudden and easy wealth was the prize offered to the owner of the fortunate townsite, the eagerness with which they sought to attract the shy fugitive to this and that embryo settlement can easily be understood. Of course, only one could be supremely successful; of the others it was a fortunate community that survived Omaha's victory with even a trace of the breath of life; the greater number have perished utterly from off the map. Wyoming is one of these, for the station on the Missouri Pacific road which now bears that name is several miles distant from the river-landing where once stood a hopeful aspirant for the premiership of the west, and was probably christened only out of respect

"The Wyoming of 1857 was, however, as

promising an infant as any the territory boasted. It was not until the year following that its nearest neighbor, Nebraska City. scored the one point that A public installation of officers for all gained in the race by securing of the Omaha lodges, Ancient Order of the location of the military depot, United Workmen, was held Wednesday night whence army supplies, brought thus far by and it was an event of much prominence steamboat, were forwarded across the plains in the history of this order for the present by the government contractors; the thing year. The officers installed will serve dur- that infused vitality into Nebraska City's ing the present fiscal period. M. E. Shultz veins for a brief ten years, when the openof Beatrice, grand master workman for the ing of the Union Pacific railroad snuffed rangements made by the committee having Bluffs packet 'Watossa' is a steady advertiser, and will positively make weekly trips during the season of 1857; the editor added color to the hall and impressiveness notices with much pleasure the rapidity to the installation exercises. The music with which S. F. Nuckolls' large stone store house progresses; instruction in the use of the scriptures and the singing of church music are advertised; William J. Hughes, M. D., tenders his professional services to the citizens of Wyoming City; F. S. Haffa respectfully announces to the citizens of Wyoming City and the surrounding country that he has opened a coach and 'waggon' manufactory; the Telescope has advertisers in St. Louis, Chicago, Minneapolis and Sloux City, besides a good number from Nebraska City, Plattsmouth, Florence, Chinton, Cassville, Lewiston and Ganosha, as befits the organ of the 'place formed by nature,' as the editor explains, 'for the depot of the Weeping Water valley.' But who can now tell where Clinton and Lewiston, N. T., and those other places stood?

The Railroad. "Just as two or three could not be gathered together on the prairie in those days without organizing themselves into a city, so no our know_that planted itself there would be the city of the future; so all were ambitious to have 'the ferruginous equine quadruped wisk his tail Omaha papers, will not be held, the comin our midst, as one early editor neatly mittee having come to the conclusion that

Wyoming Gity, N. T., is more curious reading than the story of the Wyoming, St. Peters & Fort Kearney Railroad company, which was organized at a great mass meeting convened in Mahan hall on the evening of September 15, 1857. A notice, signed 'many citizens' had been published a month beforehand, calling on the inhabitants of the surrounding country and of Civil Bend, ia., to come out 'for an interchange of sentiment,' and in the interval the Telescope had contained several interesting articles by Amicus and others pointing out why the railroad should be built from Wyoming and no other point. H. Hurst, esq., presided over the meeting, a code of rules and regulations, prepared by J. G. Treadway, esq., was adopted, a committee was appointed to memorialize congress, 'the meeting was then addressed in an elequent and forcible manner by Charles Van Wyck, esq., and others' and adjourned. "It was pointed out that railroads were no longer an experiment, as was demonstrated by 'the successful operations of the railroads of Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania and other states. These had shown that the 'inconveniences of snow and cold' not insurmountable obstacles, and had alse proven that railreading paid, for they were all 'declaring largely increased annual dividends.' And if this was the case in those effete civilizations, what could not be expected in this favored section, 'with dimate peculiarly favorable to the production of the grape, the strawberry, the raspberry, the wild plum and the apple?" the 'hardy New Englander' would rush in by trainloads, to a spot where, 'in the geographical center of the United States, he may proudly reflect and watch with constantly increasing interest upon the glant growth which as a people, we are so rapidly attaining."

A Sure Thing.

"But without waiting for the hardy New Englander to embrace this privilege, just give 'the wealthy companies that are not organizing to our west' a railroad outlet to the Atlantic for 'the millions of bushels of excellent salt which will be there manufactured (on Salt creek, no doubt) and you at once perceive, that a sure and never-falling source of revenue is immediately secured. The heavy dividends which the stockholders would realize would give to this road a character equal to those which lead from the great coal works of Pennsylvania into the wealthy manufacturing and commercial markets of Philadelphia and Pittsburg.' This ought to have been conclusive; but there was yet more behind. Figure up the sums to be earned by hauling coal to the 'furnaces of the manufacturers of your city' and other points, 'and some idea may be drawn of the value of the stock.' Nor was this all; the bold statement is advanced that the country between Wyoming and Fort Kearney is of value for the growing of cereals, 'while as a stock-raising country, it is not surpassed by the musquette country of Texas or the reeds of Michigan." "The Wyoming, St. Peters & Fort Kearney Railroad company was accordingly organized, with a capital stock of $4,000,000, 'with power to increase the same to $50,000,000; a committee was appointed to see that subscription books were opened in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, Cincinnati, Pittsourg and such other places as said committee may think proper,' and the rest of the story, as Mr. Kipling says in concluding one of his tales, is not worth the telling.

TUCKED VEILING COSTUME FROM HARPER'S BAZAR

The design of a veiling costume reproduced from Harper's Bazar and illustrated on this page has an effective bodice, self- trimmed, and one that will prove easy to reproduce. The back of the garment is se amed, groups of four tucks meeting exactly in the center. The upward-turning tucks of the front of the bodice meet the back tucks in the underarm seam with a cor responding exactness. The bodice buttons in the center of the front over a long, na rrow vest. The long, oblique tucks end at the center line of the front, but the ma terial extends three and one-half inches beyond, forming a full ruffle that runs from neck to waint line. Where greater trimming is desired than these two almost-meeting ruffles a center frill of lace or of doubled mousseline de soie is suggested. The top group of tucks extends only to the collar line at shoulder seam. The high-pointed collar is edged with three narrow folds of the veiling and a cravat of white mousseline should be worn to obtain the effect shown in the illustration.' The long sheath sleeves are tucked with groups of four tucks, marked as are tho se of the waist. The sleeves continue over the hand without separate cuff.

inches deep in the front and twelve in the back when completed. It is made of plain veiling cut on the straight of the goods and vertically tucked to within six inches of the hem in groups of four tucks each. The overdress continues the scheme of grouping of four tucks that fit the fig ure around the hips and end in graded depths to suggest the outlines of an apron. Of veiling forty-four inches wide ten yards will be sufficient to make this cos-
