

PLANNING SUMMER OUTFITS

Society People Still in Town Poring Over Maps and Guides.

DULL SEASON SOCIALLY NOT WELL BEGIN

Moontlight Excursions and Rides Into the Country Take the Place of More Formal Affairs—Echoes from the Resorts.

There is nothing new just at present in the society world of Omaha, whose favored members are apparently entirely lost to the gay world and buried in their dens where they pass their time in one or two ways, namely, either in studying books of travel and trying to come to the important decision on where to lie for a summer, or in directing the packing of numerous enormous trunks and endless hat boxes. Although the majority of the society set are enjoying the mountains, seashore or a continental trip, there are a few left to huddle with unbounded joy in the delight of frequent gaieties which crop up from time to time.

Twenty-five representatives of Nebraska, selected almost as many different localities, visited the exposition yesterday, examining the buildings and grounds until late at night. These men were the members of a committee appointed by President Miller some time ago, their duties being to examine the buildings and grounds and then to publish a report of their findings, relative to the merits or demerits of the exposition.

Accompanied by President Miller the committee reached the exposition grounds shortly after 11 o'clock yesterday morning and at once proceeded to the public Comfort building, where a brief period was spent after which the members sallied out on their tour of inspection. The Horticultural building was the first of the main buildings to be examined. After spending considerable time there the members of the committee retraced their steps and crossed over to the main part of the buildings, one after another. This occupied the greater portion of the afternoon.

Having completed their labors a trip was made through the Midway, and then the members of the committee visited the Indian camp on the south of the Transportation building. Here they were engaged in a partial round of the main buildings on the court, asking questions concerning the exhibits and ascertaining facts relative to their merits.

At the noon hour the members of the committee lunched with the officers of the exhibition and at dinner time the guests of the executive committee at the Philippine restaurant.

While the members of the committee absolutely refused to express an opinion relative to the exposition or the exhibits, it was apparent that they were well pleased with what they saw and that their report when made will reflect credit upon the labors of the management.

The committee will meet again Monday morning, when the report will be formulated and submitted to the executive committee. Although it is not known what their report will contain, it is intimated that it will be favorable and will commend the exposition to the attention of the public.

During the morning hours the crowds at the exposition were not large. The program, however, was carried out in every detail. There was the promenade concert around the Lagoon by the Indian band, several popular airs being rendered.

In the afternoon after the closing of the offices down town, the number of visitors was augmented during the latter part of the day the buildings were well filled, while there was quite a lot of people on the main court and along the Midway. Night brought out a jam and from 6 o'clock until there was a steady stream of people passing through the gates. These people admired the illuminations, visited the Midway, and brought up at the Battle of Manila. All in all, the attendance yesterday was quite satisfactory to the management of the exposition.

One thing that was particularly noticeable yesterday was the number of transients who were visiting the exposition. There have been few visitors from outside of the city, South Omaha and Council Bluffs, but yesterday fully one-third of the visitors were from abroad—men and women who have not been here before this season. They expressed much interest in the exhibits and witnesses the destruction of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila.

If there is one place more than another that is sought after during the hot nights it is the Giant Sea-Saw. From the dizzy heights where the car goes there is always a cool breeze, which makes a ride in the upper currents of the air a most enjoyable pastime.

The opening of the Fat Man's Beer Garden in the German Village was an event on the Midway yesterday. Mr. Rehm has reserved a space in his village for Henri Marica Cannon, the famous fat man from Germany, weighing 617 pounds, being the heaviest man in the world. It is one of the coolest places on the exposition grounds to spend a hot time and get a fine glass of Edelweiss beer, and see the fat man, free of charge.

Since the opening of the Temple of Palmetry Dr. Perin has had many peculiar people call upon him from the attractions of the Midway, but yesterday capped the climax when he was visited by an Arizona Indian, who had become frightened at the sight he saw here and who, having heard through an interpreter of the wonderful powers of Dr. Perin, wished to ascertain for sure whether he would ever return to his desert home or not. On being positively assured by the doctor that he was in no danger here, but that he would live to return and be honored by his tribe for the trip he had taken, he went away happy and said that he would send more of his people to see the great white man, a new and most wonderful power. He also assured the doctor somewhat by telling him that the palmetry was known to the Indians of the Plans for a Military Spectacle. Special Feature for Monday Night for the Entertainment of Visitors. The people are waiting with great anticipation for the magnificent spectacle in the way of a musical military combination to be given on the Grand Plaza tomorrow evening.

The spectacle is named "San Juan, or the Army Quincentennial" and has been written and arranged especially for the exposition by Lieutenant Dan Godfrey, who has been in constant conference for the past week with Musical Director Kelly with regard to the best means of making the evening a success. The story is based upon the gathering of the United States troops and is done in true military fashion. After a long period of incidental music, which is realistically suggestive of camp life, a bugle call is heard in the distance and is followed by the far-off strains of martial music. Presently a band comes in sight playing regimental airs and preceding a company of regular United States troops in full uniform. Just as they arrive another bugle call is heard and immediately after it the sound of a distant drum, which soon reaches the ears of the noise of an approaching drum corps, with a troop of infantry, while the prancing of horses is heard in the distance. The sounds of the drum corps are almost drowned by the shrill, clear sounds of another bugle, and a company of soldiers, headed by a full brass band, appears on the scene amid heavy cannoning. Then all the bands and soldiers assemble beneath a large flag and the "Star Spangled Banner" is played by the united musicians amid a salute of artillery and small arms. Lieutenant Godfrey will have under his direction the Indian band and his band, the Indian band and a corps of veteran drum majors, in addition to the United States troops and his own British band.

SCENES ALONG THE MIDWAY.

New Shows Open to Claim a Share of the Public Attention.

The Hawaiian village, with its forty people from the Sandwich Islands, is open to the public. The first performance in the theater was given last night and to standing-room, too. From the first the actors made a hit and at every subsequent performance during the evening the house was packed. The Hawaiian theater is a neat wooden structure, well seated, ventilated and comfortable. The scenery is resplendent in many colors and everything about it has a tropical appearance. On the sides of the arch huge coconut trees are attached, while the flies and wings of the stage represent scenery in and around Honolulu. The back curtain, which is the gem of them all, gives an idea of one of the old Hawaiian towns. There is here a broad street running down the middle and on either side are the thatched huts of the natives. The house was before civilization made its intrusions and changed the habits and customs of the people.

Regarding the performance, it proved a pleasant surprise. It was as clean as one would see in the first-class theaters of any city, though it was slightly on the vaudeville order. The first number on the program was by the members of the famous double quartet that made such a popular hit upon the Lagoon Friday evening. The members of the organization played upon violins, flutes and mandolins and captivated the audience completely, being compelled to respond to an encore. The music is sweet, low and distinct, but full of volume, with a touch of sadness running through it. The next number presented was a native dance by three dainty girls. This dance is something new here and was loudly applauded. The girls wore short red skirts, wreaths of green leaves about their heads and necks and anklets of sheepskin. In dancing they kept time with hands, feet and bodies to the music, which for the occasion was a dull, droning sing-song, much like that of the Indians. The music was pounded out of wooden boxes and it was a difficult matter to realize that the half-naked musicians squating at the rear of the stage were the same as those who electrified the audience a few moments previous. The entire performance consisted of music, vocal and instrumental, and dancing, with nothing to offend the most fastidious.

The exhibition of deep sea diving, with Captain and Mrs. Sorcho in the title role, drew a very select and large audience during the evening and furnished a great deal of instructive entertainment for all who visited the place. The owners of the concession have a neat and attractive theater, with a huge tank filled with filtered water, where the performance is given. A great deal of work is done in the tank, which is a plate glass front, thus enabling the spectators to witness the work connected with searching along the bottom of the sea. The woman is clad in a diving suit, which has a helmet enclosing the head. In this there are small windows, through which the operator sees. Connected with the helmet are pipes running to the surface and through which fresh air is pumped down, while through other pipes the foul air is permitted to escape.

Last night in giving the exhibition Mrs. Sorcho carried an electric light, which shown brightly as she groped about the bottom of the tank. She gave an exhibition of collecting valuables, searching for dead bodies and the methods pursued in raising sunken ships. The entertainment was very enjoyable.

Hasenback did an enormous business last night, frequently being compelled to turn away the crowds that thronged the seats around the pit where the performances with the wild animal took place. Last night, for the first time in a couple of weeks, four lions were turned into the pit, where their trainer handled them in a manner that created considerable attention. The beasts were unusually ugly and time and again prepared to spring upon the trainer, who, with whip and rod, fogged them into submission, compelling them to climb up and perform some of the floor like so many dogs afraid of their master.

A litter of four lions, born in captivity here last summer, was turned into the ring and put through a course of training. These litters, though usually docile, showed fight and a number of times tried to spring upon their trainer, who was always managed to keep them in front of him. For the amusement of the children, as well as the older people, an entertaining exhibition was given with the trained dogs. These animals do numerous tricks, and in performing some of them it is easy to believe that they are endowed with reason.

Lunette was one of the attractions that drew one of the big crowds both afternoon and evening, and each and every performance was carried out in every detail. There was the promenade concert around the Lagoon by the Indian band, several popular airs being rendered.
