of the seaport privileges that country would equire if its claims were granted. "The greatest benefit which Great Britain expects to derive from a settlement of the soundary question in its favor is to acquire an open seacoast for its great northwest territories and to weaken us by breaking our exclusive jurisdiction north of 54 degrees. "With one or more seaports leading out to the Pacific ocean Great Britain would come

"The right of complete jurisdiction over this coast, exercised so long by Russia without protest from Great Britain, became our by purchase in 1867 and for many years after that Great Britain acquiesced in our exercise of authority over the territory as Russia exercised it.

that it claimed its boundary line from the outer edge of the islands, instead of running parallel to the coast line reckoned from the coast of the mainland.

"To accede to Canada's claim would be to give it all of value that the United States
