Gallery No. 2 Has Many Excellent Paintings in It.

Director Key has been putting some final touches in the art building which have added much to the appearance of the different rooms. A little effective drapery of a dull maroon color has been placed above and behind some of the more prominent pictures which adds materially to their appictures which adds materially to their appearance. The pictures in a gallery are not so numerous as in No. 1, but there are several there that will bear close inspec-tion and careful scrutiny. There are forty-one canvases on the walls. The largest one, and the one that will, by reason of its prominence, attract the eye the first of all is "A Pastoral" by Amanda Brewster Sewall. Two large figures in the foreground are women in classic draperies. They are an ancient garden and the sunlight pouring down upon it makes a bright background, the shadows all being in the foreground. The whole effect is good, the peculiarity of the darker part making the foreground being so out of the ordinary that it pleases.

A bit of the sea-wet, fresh and seemingly blown over by a salt wind is a picture called "The Trackless Ocean," by Walter Shop-herd. The water seems to pulsate under ones eyes and the moonlight shining down upon it seems to shimmer with the moving waves. The picture is one of the most efin the room, and will attract all fective lovers of the ocean by its faithfulness to life. One brilliant star above the moon Spicer. adds another touch that gives pleasure to the beholder.

A brilliant bit of painting is "Diana," by Blenner. It is a bust of the hunters, done in glowing colors, and the light floating draperies and the brilliance introduced into the flesh as though sunshine were shining on the face and hands are strikingly good. A landscape, that is restful to the eye, subdued in tone and cleanly done, is "Through the Woods and Meadows," by Hartson. This bit of pastoral beauty is flanked on Monday was Samson's day and Monday light was his night, from the indications at the Den. Between the hours of 11 and 12 s. m. every whistle in town blew a blast oud enough to waken the dead and the hello girls rang the telephones in the offices of the business men announceing that the hour was reserved for work for King Sam-

The business men dropped their employnent wherever they could and began to work for Samson, with the result that they had a good many novices for the iniatory ceremonies of the evening. The Den was crowded with Sir Knights and a great time was enjoyed by all present. The aerial railway, that has made so much fun for the ast few meetings, was productive of much merriment and the ranks of Ak-Sar-Ben V were materially augmented by the numerous initiations.

There are golf jackets, newmarkets, top coats and capes, and an immense stock of sealskins, Persian lambs, Astrachans in cloaks and countless designs in novelty collarettes. On this floor the new reception room is being put in overlooking the street. There will be writing desks and supplies of stationary for the use of ladies who may have occasion to write letters while shopping.

Balduff's ice cream and fancy summer drinks will be served near the reception room. Other Features.

A part of the floor above has been fitted out for the offices of the members of the firm and the cashier's corps of assistants. The adjoining wing is filled with furniture, several large shipments having been received recently and unpacked for sale and display. These holes have been allowed to remain for days, so it is stated, thus laying the city liable for damages in case of accidents. It is asserted that the water company will be requested to pay strict attention to caveins from this time on in order to prevent accidents and keep the roads in as good condition as possible.

Reported Holdup in Albright. The night operator at the Rock Island depot in Albright sent a hurry call to police headquarters last night for help. Captain Allie and Officer Montague drove down and were told by the operator that two tramps had entered the depot and relieved him of his revolver. The tramps wanted money but the operator was shy of cash. The police do not place any credence in the story and are inclined to think that the operator was merely frightened.
