Curchaser. A bronze statue of Christopher Columue, which stood like a scarecrow on the lake front, Chicago, for a few years, with an appealing hand outstretched towards the Auditorium dining room, may soon become the property of St. Joe, across the lake, prominent residents of that resort having dispatched A. G. Prector, a townsman, to Chicago, as a committee of one to see what per navigator. If a satisfactory deal is made, relates the Inter Ocean, Columbus will be taken from the dump heap behind the Washington park stables and perched on the sandhill at the Michigan summer resort to welcome elopers as they come from the boat landing and to frighten away cranes.

Columbus' lot since he left the hands of hotels on the boulevard. that should be melted into a church bell, He pointed out all the weak points in the discoverer. He said that his pose was not natural, his feet were too big and that from the look of agony on his face he had evidently eaten paris green. Then other critics joined in the chorus of condemnation. Citizens abused the sailor, and then the South Park board, to whom the statue belonged, turned against him and he was ruthlessly hauled down and carted away to Washington park, where, through the heat of summer and the snows of winter, prone on his back, with sad eyes to the sky, the once proud sentinel of the lake-front has lain amid cobblestones, broken wagon wheels, lumber and brush heaps.

the lakefront. Columbus picked up his ears and smiled. He is not hoping in vain, it is said, as the people of St. Joe are seriously considering the advisability of buying him. A few days ago a public meeting was held there, at which several wealthy citizens pledged themselves to furnish half the purchase price if the other half were raised by subscribtion. Many other citizens pledged large amounts and all that is required to put the deal through is the consent of Chicago to part with the statue. It is not believed that the Park Commissioners will oppose the sale of the statue, and public sentiment in the past indicates that but few citizens will regret to see the familiar figure relegated to the peach belt. Some who are unkind say must have seen him only through a spyglass over a foggy lake. A. G. Proctor, commissioned by the St. Joe people to buy the statue, was formerly the real estate business in the summer resort. He arrived in the city recently to take away the Columbian statue if too much is not asked for it, and it is not ex-

Devices on Their Neckwear. When somebody starts a new idea in wearing apparel or any other matter which interests humanity, the idea is seized upon with avidity. This is especially true of man, for the only changes be can encompass are with reference to the cut of coat or trousers. He must appear in a suit of sables in the evening with the same robbery of the skirts of the coat which marked the dawn of 1812. So when anything new does come up it is before the lime lights some man became possessed of an idea. That idea consisted of drawing an outline sketch of some bug or beetle upon the white collars of mankind. Bugs of the most horrible and fear inspiring appearance were drawn with forceps-like
