This, it appears, told the witness that he was dealing with an adventuress. He heard that she had fine acquaintances, including Dreyfus, and in view of the fact that in such companionship Dreyfus was liable to commit some imprudent action, witness informed Lieutenant Colonel Bertin of his fears.

Referring to the organization of the Intelligence department Major Gendron said that he had viewed with deep pain the destruction of all the work the "great patriot, Colonel Sandherr," had done in defense of the country. "It is a great mis-fortune," he added, "that such a man no longer exists." Major Besse, Captain Boullenger, Colonel
