SIDNEY HONORS HIS SOLDIER

Public Reception and Banquet in the Rink and a Presentation to Frank Cordwell.

SIDNEY, Neb., Sept. 12.—(Special Telegram.)—The public reception tendered by the citizens of Sidney tonight to Frank J. Bordwell, late of Company L, Third Nebraska Volunteers, was an elaborate affair. The skating rink was dressed with flags and bunting and decorated with flowers, and over the stage was a banner, "Welcome Home." As the guest of the evening appeared there was a great shout and the Sidney coronet band struck up "The Star Spangled Banner." Rev. Mr. Baker of the Episcopal church delivered the address of welcome and Matthew A. Daugherty, upon the part of friends, presented the young soldier with a gold watch, charm and chain. Bordwell was completely taken by surprise, but said he felt he had only done a soldier's duty in helping to preserve the stars and stripes in foreign climes and recognized some of the valorous deeds of the First Nebraska, complimenting the lamented Colonel Stoenberg.

After a banquet, which lasted over an hour, Toastmaster McIntosh introduced several prominent citizens who made short speeches. William Groveson and Daniel Aldridge, formerly of Torrey's Rough Riders, were honorary guests and told of their experiences. Father Flood closed the entertainment with an oration on "American In-"

CORNELIUS VANDERBILT DEAD

Prominent Eastern Capitalist Suddenly Summoned to Meet His Maker.

STROKE OF PARALYSIS CARRIES HIM OFF

Taken with Sudden Illness Shortly After Retiring and Passed Away at 5 O'clock in the Morning.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—Cornelius Vanderbilt is dead. Death occurred at 5:15 o'clock a. m. at his home at Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, which he had occupied for many years. He was 83 years of age. Mr. Vanderbilt at the time of his death his wife, his daughter Gladys, and Reginald, his youngest son.

Mr. Vanderbilt arrived at his Fifth avenue home from New York at 11 o'clock on Sunday at 9 o'clock last night. He appeared in excellent health and spirits and retired soon afterward.

About midnight he was seized with a serious attack and the house-bells rang. Dr. E. G. Janeway and several other physicians, who arrived in a short time. Every-thing possible was done for the patient, but he grew rapidly worse and died at a quarter past 5 o'clock.

Mrs. Vanderbilt and her daughter, Miss Gladys, are prostrated by the shock and physicians are attending them.

Mr. Vanderbilt's death was caused by a stroke of paralysis of the face, which he suffered. The first attack was in July, 1896. The stroke which caused death occurred about midnight. The patient was semi-conscious. Dr. F. Tilden Brown was in attendance when Mr. Vanderbilt died. A. Chauncey M. Depew, who lived at the Vanderbilt house at 7:30 o'clock. He remained but a few minutes. When he came out he was greatly affected and with tears in his eyes said he was too deeply grieved to give any information at that time.

Mr. Vanderbilt left five children—Cornelius, Gertrude, Alfred, Reginald and Gladys. Cornelius married a daughter of T. Wilson, the banker, about two years ago. Gertrude is married to the late Harry Payne Whitney, son of former Secretary of the Navy William C. Whitney.

William K., Frederick W. and George are the surviving brothers of Cornelius Vanderbilt. After the first stroke of paralysis, Mr. Vanderbilt lived for three months, refraining from entertaining, however, and living very quietly. His sojourn in Washington in the summer of 1898 was his last. He returned to his home in New York in April, 1897, he appeared to many of his friends to be nearly as strong and as well as he ever had been. Plans were made for a trip to Europe during the following month.

In the months following his departure his friends were delighted by letters describing his health as steadily growing firmer, and said that his physicians had consented to his returning home in the autumn, but with the exception of a few days in New York, he did not come time content himself with a very general supervision of the Vanderbilt railway systems, and relinquish entirely the details which he had previously taken up at this time.

However, either inclination or a change of opinion on the part of his physicians—of the banker of the city, who was not the principal heir. The opposition to young Vanderbilt's marriage was based upon his youth and the fact that Miss Wilson was eight or ten years his senior.

At the time of his death Mr. Vanderbilt was president of the Canada Southern railroad, vice president and director of the Beach Creek railroad, president of the Detroit & Bay City railroad, director of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis railroad, director of the Detroit & Chicago railroad, director of the Dunkirk, Allegheny Valley & Pittsburgh railroad, director of the Hudson River bridge company, president of the Erie Railroad, president of the Leamington & St. Clair railroad, president of the New York & Harlem railroad, president of the Spuyten Duyvil & Poughkeepsie railroad, president of the New York & Ontario terminal company, director of the T. & O. Canada Southern & Detroit Railroad company, and director of the Central & Hudson River and a dozen other affiliated railroads.

Sorrow at Newport. NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 12.—The announcement of the sudden death of Cornelius Vanderbilt, New York, this morning, was a heavy blow to the residents of Newport, among whom he had been a familiar figure for fifteen years. Mr. Vanderbilt's immediate friends were deeply affected by the news.

Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt left Newport yesterday for New York. On his departure Mr. Vanderbilt appeared in excellent health. He had taken a prominent place in the summer life at Newport, and his entertainments have been of the most elaborate character. Since his first illness in 1896 he had lived quietly at his villa during the summer, entertaining but little, but during the past season he had taken a greater interest in the social affairs of the city, being especially popular at the Newport Casino, of which he was for many years president. He was a regular attendant at the morning concerts, the tennis tournament and horse show, and drove out daily with his family.

He had always been kindly and word for his many friends and acquaintances. He was a regular attendant at the services of Trinity church and contributed largely to its support. He was a generous contributor to local charities and had a good sum in aid of the local Young Men's Christian association. His purse was ever open to aid the sick and distressed in Newport, and on his departure in the autumn of 1897 he left a considerable sum for distribution among the poor during the winter.

Two of his children, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, occupy cottages here.

Mr. Vanderbilt purchased The Breakers on Pierre Lotillard in 1884, and occupied the villa until the fall of 1893, when it was destroyed by fire. The following year he began the construction of the new The Breakers, which is one of the most palatial and extensive estates in Newport, its cost alone being estimated at $1,900,000.

Chauncey M. Depew gave out the following statement this afternoon: "Mr. Vanderbilt left Newport at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon to attend a meeting of the New York Central and the New York and New Haven railroads. He got home about 9 o'clock and retired at 10, feeling well. He fell asleep and slept until between 5 and 6 o'clock this morning. He then awoke, calling Mrs. Vanderbilt to tell her he was very ill. She aroused the household and sent for physicians. Mr. Vanderbilt died before any of them arrived. He had been in bed for several days, and the funeral would take place at 10:30 Friday morning. A special boat will carry the body, family and friends, from the foot of West Forty-second street to Staten Island. The burial will be in New York, where the Vanderbilt mansion is, and where his several members of the family, including Commodore Vanderbilt.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., telegraphed from Newport immediately after he was informed of his father's death that he was on his way to this city.

Sketch of His Career. Cornelius Vanderbilt was born on Staten Island November 27, 1816. William H. Vanderbilt, his father, was at that time a farmer and Cornelius, at the age of thirteen, school and secured a place as messenger in the Shoe and Leather bank. His grandfather, the commodore, learning of this, sent for him and asked why he had not applied to him for a place.

"Because I am a student to ask you for anything," was the reply.

This pleased the commodore, and it is said that he made a covenant with his will a few days later leaving $1,000,000 to his grandson.

Cornelius left the Shoe and Leather bank to go into the employ of Kean and Boscawen, but later his grandfather asked him to enter the railroad service. The young man was making $60 a month and declined to leave his place unless he got more money. He was given $45 and he accepted the position. The first place he was given was that of assistant treasurer of the New York & Harlem railroad.

His rise was rapid and he succeeded his father as head of the Vanderbilt system. Mr. Vanderbilt's death was practically closed when he suffered a paralytic stroke in 1896.

Despite his enormous business interests he found time to devote to church and social work, which he began early in life. He gave freely to the railroad branch of the Young Men's Christian association and to the work of St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal church in New York city.

Mr. Vanderbilt's great business cares made his life necessarily methodical and he was noted for his punctuality.

Mr. Vanderbilt went to Europe last spring and came home on June 24, accompanied by Mrs. Vanderbilt and his daughter, Gladys. They went to Newport the same day and Mr. Vanderbilt improved constantly in his health. On August 5 he gave a house party at his home, The Breakers, and the funeral of the late Captain Lee Forby. A full attendance of the members is desired. It is uncertain yet when the remains of the gallant officer will arrive, but they will probably be here sometime Friday. The body will be escorted from the cemetery to the mortuary, where it will be guarded by a detail until the time for the funeral services on Sunday.

BOB-TAILED ROMANCE. A Cavalier Officer Who Had Ideas of a Matrimonial Union.

The presence of a young cavalry officer in Chicago last week and his subsequent evolutions in the saloons of the city, reports the Tribune, have furnished the denoument of a "bob-tailed" romance of the Spanish war.

The young man, who begged the reporter to refer to him merely as Jackson, registered at a downtown hotel and then struck into a double-gait for the clubs of his friends. After the customary shower of introductory sentiments the lieutenant burst out: "Say, fellows, I want you to get me into Chicago society."

"There isn't any in the summer," replied one of the group. "Besides, we couldn't, anyway. We have our reputations to look after, and we don't know what you and Hobson have been doing out there in the Philippines."

The effort of mounting the stairs brought on the attack.

COMPANY L MEETS TONIGHT. Arrangements Will Be Made for the Funeral of the Late Captain Lee Forby.

There will be a meeting of Company L, First Nebraska Volunteers, at the Thurston Rifles' armory tonight to make arrangements for the funeral of the late Captain Lee Forby. A full attendance of the members is desired. It is uncertain yet when the remains of the gallant officer will arrive, but they will probably be here sometime Friday. The body will be escorted from the cemetery to the mortuary, where it will be guarded by a detail until the time for the funeral services on Sunday.

BOB-TAILED ROMANCE. A Cavalier Officer Who Had Ideas of a Matrimonial Union.

The presence of a young cavalry officer in Chicago last week and his subsequent evolutions in the saloons of the city, reports the Tribune, have furnished the denoument of a "bob-tailed" romance of the Spanish war.

The young man, who begged the reporter to refer to him merely as Jackson, registered at a downtown hotel and then struck into a double-gait for the clubs of his friends. After the customary shower of introductory sentiments the lieutenant burst out: "Say, fellows, I want you to get me into Chicago society."

"There isn't any in the summer," replied one of the group. "Besides, we couldn't, anyway. We have our reputations to look after, and we don't know what you and Hobson have been doing out there in the Philippines."

This and similar gibes were evidence of the fact that only a full confession would suffice, and one by one the men were taken aside and allowed to view the photograph of a beautiful young woman. The warrior swore by the blood of a hundred victories that he would find the original of that picture, in the event of failure he expressed a desire to be eaten alive by the Filipinos.

None of them recognized the young woman. They introduced him to scores of other society men and women, but they all stared blankly at the photograph and show their heads in the desperation. Lieutenant Jackson produced the following in evidence: "Chicago, Ill., April 11, 1898.—My Dear Lieutenant: I have just seen your likeness in an April magazine, and take the liberty of writing to you to ask a favor. I am getting old; I am nearly 21, and begin to fear that I shall never be married. Now, all the apoplexy I ever knew give as the reason for their single state the plea that their lovers went away to the war and never came back. I believe the present war again offers the same opportunity to every young man."

"And this is the favor: In the event of your death in the war, will you give me permission to say that we were engaged to be married? I enclose my photograph and remain sincerely, Y. Y. Z., "General delivery, Chicago postoffice."

The return mail carried an affirmative reply from the young officer, together with his photograph. Though he begged her to write to him, he never received any further communication. He served through the war in Cuba without wounds or sickness and was then transferred to the Philippines, where the climate undermined his health. He was discharged in San Francisco on sick leave and came immediately to Chicago on his wife's "one-wisp" mission.

After days of continued search the young woman was identified as a prominent member of the Chicago society. She had a friend volunteered to call with the officer on the following evening.

At the sight of the bronzed face and sound of the name the girl was startled out of her self-possession, but rallied during the pleasant conversation to continue conversation.

"Lieutenant Jackson has called," said the friend maliciously, "to assure you of his best wishes."

"How nice of you, lieutenant," she exclaimed, with visible relief. "And can't you stay for the wedding, too? It will be next week."

The officer looked mystified. "You don't mean to say you're engaged?" he gasped. "Yes, didn't you know it?" she replied, with a scowl at the mutual friend.

"But I—why—your letter?" "Oh, yes I know, lieutenant. But we were to be engaged only in case you died," was the consulting response.

SHOWER HONORS ON DYER

Baltimore Entertains Commander of Cruiser Named from the City.

PRESENT HIM WITH A HANDSOME SWORD. Reviews Monitor Parade—Living Flag Composed of Three Thousand School Children One of the Features.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 12.—Captain N. Mayo Dyer, one of the heroes of Manila and commander of the cruiser Baltimore in the memorable conflict of May 1, 1898, was honored by this city today. Residents and business houses were gay with bunting, the streets were jammed with people wearing "Dyer buttons" and "Dyer badges" during the entire day, and all the ships in the harbor, regardless of nationality, were decked in his honor.

Soon after breakfast Captain Dyer was taken in charge by a special committee and entertained in various ways until 1:30 p. m., when he was escorted to the city hall to be welcomed by a reception committee consisting of about 200 of Baltimore's most prominent people, headed by Mayor Malster. Meanwhile a procession, composed of the Fourth and Fifth regiments of the Maryland National guard, the Naval Reserve corps, the Fifth Regiment, Veteran corps, two companies of the United States artillery regulars from Fort Mifflin, the Maryland division of the Grand Army of the Republic and many uniform civic and semi-military organizations, paraded through the principal streets of the city, passing the city hall, where Captain Dyer reviewed the procession and where, upon an immense platform, 3,000 school children were so arranged as to form an immense imitation of the American flag.

When the parade was over Mayor Malster, on behalf of the city of Baltimore, presented to Captain Dyer a set of resolutions commending his conduct at Manila and his record as an officer, after which he handed him a magnificent sword, also the gift of the city council and the people of Baltimore. Captain Dyer accepted both in a speech full of gratitude and expressions of the kindest feeling toward his hosts and entertainers.

The sword is said to be one of the finest weapons of his kind in this country. The scabbard is finished in gold and the blade is of Damascus steel. On the scabbard are representations of the coats of the United States and Maryland, the Battle and Washington monuments of the cruiser Baltimore, and on the sword hilt are symbolic representations of the arms of the naval service. The scabbard has a service and a fatigue belt.

After the presentation ceremonies the guests, accompanied by a large number of the members of the reception committee, repaired to Riverside park, where a public reception was held.

A banquet in the evening at the Hotel Bennett rounded out the day's celebration.

IVORY SUPPLY IS PLENTIFUL.

Siberian Mammoths Will Furnish Enough for Billiard Balls.

"I do not apprehend a famine in the ivory market," says a man who claims to be a manufacturer of billiard balls, said the New York Times man, "for, although the African jungles are not yielding as largely as formerly, there are other fields of supply from which we can draw."

With the constantly decreasing supply of ivory in Africa that highly prized substance would soon command almost prohibitive prices were it not for the existence in the frozen tundras of Siberia of a sufficient quantity of mammoth ivory to accommodate the world's demands for generations to come. There in the soil are found tons of ivory, the product of the mammoth (elephas primigenius), a species closely allied to the elephant of India, but protected from the immense cold of the Arctic regions by a coat of long, coarse hair grown over a fine woolly underfur at the skin.

Thousands of these frozen mammoths are found crowded and jammed together on the tundra. Science does not attempt to explain how the giant animals were able to live in a climate that preserves their remains by freezing. The reason for the great accumulations of mammoths in certain places is also a mystery. The theory that the bodies were carried there by floods of the rivers flowing from warmer southern districts is untenable. Examination of the stomachs of some of the frozen mammoths reveals the presence of parts of pine needles and other vegetable substances, from which it is inferred that the tundra must have had a forest growth during the mammoth epoch. The same indications are found in the stomachs of the two species of rhinoceros which lived contemporaneously with the mammoth in the tundras.

Similar concentrated accumulations of bones of larger recent mammals have been found in certain districts of east Africa. This mammoth ivory, far from being a recent discovery, was known to the ancients and has been used for centuries as the article of commerce and manufacture. The records show that as early as 1821 ivory of this kind to the extent of 20,000 pounds was marketed in Yakutsk, and that during the mammoth epoch 125 to 150 tons averaged over 60,000 pounds. In 1840 Dr. Middendorf, who visited the vast territory, estimated that the annual output of Siberian ivory reached 110,000 pounds, representing at least 100 individual mammoths. Baron Nordenskiold estimated in 1875 that fully 20,000 Siberian mammoths had contributed their ivory to the world's markets since the conquest of Siberia.
