sical spectacle "Santiago." It was given for the third time, but with so many new features and with so much more amoothness that it seemed like a new thing and was greeted with great applause by a large crowd. The graceful dancers at the beginning of the extravaganza made a delightful beginning, and from that on to the grand climax where the battle occurs there is a gradual deepening of interest.

The battle Monday night was especially good for the reason that the participants have had rehearsals and know how to manage the affair. A pretty new feature was the addition of the city of tents, simulating cramped and it tipped a few feet, pitching an actual field of battle, with the many soldiers standing about.

The sham battle in the afternoon drew a fair audience. The arrangements there, too, have been changed somewhat, and they are for the betterment of the show. In the beginning the Sioux are brought up in bands on horseback to the strains of a march. Bands of Porcupine, White Clay, Wounded Knee and Medicine Root Sloux rode forward and the chief of each division rode was the usual fancy trick riding and other the Mystic Shriners. wild western features before the battle. The Indians simulated death and fell over and rolled upon the ground as though they were writhing in the death agony during the fight, and the whole scene was exciting and full of interest.

The high diving exhibition was the best that has been given, and the blowing up of the Maine was realistic. Alfreno gave two very creditable exhibitions on the high rope, the one in the evening being accompanied by some fine fireworks. The concert by Bellstedt's band in the afternoon was well patronized.

During all this week there will be a sham battle and high diving on the Lagoon each day, and there will also be a model of the Other Maine blown up every afternoon. special attractions will also be shown in honor of Ak-Sar-Ben week.

Built Upon the Sands.

The new wing enjoys a distinction probably limited to a few stone structures in the world in that it rests on a quicksand bottom. Captain Reynolds says that quicksand makes as good a bottom to build on as any other, provided that it cannot get away. To keep it from getting away there must be something to hold it, which in the present case is simply the weight of the surrounding earth. To go down beyond the sand was out of the question. The excavation was carried down very deep, but was stopped when it was realized that the weight of the rest of the building and the immensely heavy pumps in it would make any further digging so close to them dangerous. So the building was built on that level. As it is the floor of the pump pit is considerably below the surface of the river and there is some water on the floor in consequence, but "He pounded me so I can't brush of fifty million gallons instead of twenty millions if it were not lifting water against fire pressure. There are a good many remarkable features about the Omaha pumping station, among which is the consumption of all smoke, though cheap, dirty coal is used. Every fire-pot is provided with a combustion chamber, through which the smoke and heated air are forced and which attains a heat of from 3,500 to 4,000 degrees. The plant develops as much power as all the other power plants of the city taken together, but from its smokestack there comes only a thin blue wreath. Another remarkable thing is the fear, ever present in the minds of the managers, that the river may some day dig itself a new channel a mile or more away and leave the expensive plant high and dry and useless. To prevent this expensive riprapping is going on on both sides of the river, on the one side to keep the restless muddy monster from coming too near and for a mile or
