These rays, by such penetration of the skin, speedily kill the bacilli that cause the disease. The operation, in fact, often requires only a few seconds, whether the concentration of the rays is made from ordinary suplight or from the electric are light. The simple, unconcentrated sunlight has too slight a bactericidal property ever to be of great use for therapeutic purposes, otherwise all bacterial skin diseases would be cured epontaneously in the summer. One of the diseases in which Dr. Fineen's work has given striking practical results is lupus. This is a chronic disease of the skin, most frequent in the formale sex, commonly showing itself in childshood between the ages of 3 and 10. What is of intense interest in this connection is the fact that it is caused by the tubercle
