

FAMOUS DISHES FOR A FEAST

Culinary Confections Designed to Promote Genuine Thanks Giving.

AN IMPERIAL TURKEY, YUM! YUM

Royal Oyster Chowder and Chicken Pie, Alligator Peas, Grilled and Deviled Bones, with Toothpicks to Match.

A dainty to serve with one course of the Thanksgiving dinner is alligator or arvedo pear. It may be served with the traditional roast pig, which, by the way, now has a small ear of red corn in its mouth, instead of a lemon.

Alligator peas are imported and expensive—perhaps 20 cents each—but they are of no mean proportions, and one goes a long way. This point is one of the new things we acquire with our West and East Indian Possessions.

On the pear across in this slice and lay on a glass dish; dress with oil, salt and tarragon—a French dressing—and there you are. You both please your guests and astonish them. If the morsel has not before been tasted by them, it will be quite safe to offer a small quantity as a prize for the one who can tell what he is eating.

If afternoon tea is served before dinner, this year may be used with great success for sandwiches—indeed its mission seems to lie in this direction. Butter thinnest slices of bread—do not spread it thick. Have a paste prepared of the mashings of alligator pear, treated to the French dressing, and spread this upon the bread, but do not forget to add a trifle of nutmeg. Cut the sandwiches in diamonds, stars or squares and serve with your cup of Bohemian.

A hot morsel for the 5 o'clock function is crisp, thin gingerbread. Put them in the oven to get toasty, butter, sprinkle with a dash of cayenne pepper and you have a toothsome trifle for a cold afternoon, when you come in from the golf links, say for your cup of tea. Served with "bones"—broiled marrow bones—ginger snaps are quite chic for a late supper.

Turkey Baked and Baked. Select a plump hen turkey weighing ten or twelve pounds; dress, draw and wash it. Prepare the following dressing: Put into a bowl one quart of grated stale bread and a cupful of cream or milk. Cover and allow to stand for perhaps an hour.

NEBRASKA BOYS EAT TURKEY

Willie Green Manages to Capture the Only Gobbler in Manila.

THANKSGIVING DAY IN THE PHILIPPINES

Dan Maloney Tried and Convicted of the Crime of Wearing Clothing, Nebraska's Thanksgiving.

No matter where he is and no matter under what conditions he may be placed the American citizen proposes to have a good dinner on Thanksgiving day. Early Thanksgiving morning these young women to the number of half a hundred came, and for all the world they looked like a party of fairies, clad in white, all wearing white caps and with bunches of flowers, which they distributed among the boys.

It has been supposed that the boys who were stationed at Manila one year ago did not have much of a Thanksgiving feast. However, this seems to be an erroneous idea. A few days ago several of Company 1's boys were sitting about the tables in the mess hall when Captain Richards spoke out, saying: "Boys, I wonder what we will have for Thanksgiving dinner this year?"

The query was the signal for a general conversation which gradually drifted back to the meals to be had on the holiday. Present were men who have never crossed the Pacific and each in turn demanded that a tale be told of how Thanksgiving day was passed one year ago. Finally Willie Green, who was always regarded as the historian and story teller of the company, was prevailed on to furnish the information. "It was like this," said Green. "Of course you all know that the Spaniards and Filipinos know nothing about Thanksgiving. Still, last year they were thankful to know that they were alive. Christmas is the big holiday with them, but as it was a month away, we concluded that it would be a little feast on the day that had been designated by President McKinley as a proper occasion for giving thanks."

"At the time we were living in the barracks down by the wharves, and most of the boys were working about the customs house checking off cargo that had been brought from Hong Kong by one of the big steamers a couple of days before. We worked all the morning and until about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when we got orders to knock off for the day. After washing up, the boys held a council and decided to have a feast of some kind. A collection was taken up, and a man was sent up town to buy a turkey and other things for the spread. An hour later he returned, bearing half a dozen chickens, raisins, plums and coffee cakes, at the same time furnishing the information that the turkey was not in the market and what was more that there were none on the island.

"You never saw a more downcast lot of fellows in your life. They had fixed their mouths for turkey and they proposed to have it. Right at this point Sam Mummah came to the rescue, and he said that he had a Chinaman residing over in the outskirts of the city who had a real American turkey. A whop went up and immediately Sam was appointed a committee of one to secure that turkey, regardless of cost.

"Another collection was raised, but Sam informed the boys that he was a friend of the Chinaman and could get it without putting up a good silver dime. Away he went and in an hour time he returned with a big bird dangling under his arms. How he got it, we never knew, and he never presented an explanation, yet we were aware that he did not spend any coin in securing it. All hands turned in and assisted the cook, and in a short time we had a dinner served that would make the mouth of a glutton water. In fact we had about everything necessary for a real Thanksgiving dinner with the exception of mince pies and cranberry sauce.

"After finishing dinner most of the boys spent the afternoon loafing around the barracks, smoking Filipino cigars and telling stories of home, when suddenly and without any previous warning Dan Maloney appeared upon the scene, and he was a sight to see. He was dressed to kill. On his head he wore a silk tie and was dressed in pure white, from the sole of his feet up to the rim of that hat, barring his shirt, which was a dark pink, something never seen in Manila before and something that Dan Maloney will never be seen again. Where Dan came from no person could tell. He seemed to have dropped down from the clouds and had never been touched by a speck of dust. His collar was of the latest Spanish cut and in his hand he carried one of those bamboo walking sticks so popular with all of the dudes over there.

"Where are you going, Dan?" was the greeting that came from nearly 100 pairs of lips as the young man entered the room.

"Conviction of Dan Maloney. As soon as Dan left a devilish desire to have some fun seized the boys. It was decided to arrest and court-martial him immediately upon his return. We had watched him depart from the barracks in a carriage drawn by a pair of Filipino ponies directed by a coachman dressed fit to serve a king. We waited and watched, and along about midnight the soldier returned. He was in the pink of condition, and as soon as he entered the door an officer, appointed for the occasion, placed him under arrest. Pat White, dressed in a long, flowing robe of silk, brought over from Hong Kong, sat as judge of the court-martial and read the information, charging Dan with conduct unbecoming a soldier, that he appeared in full dress and broke all army rules and regulations by attending a pink tie where women were present. Of course the prisoner entered a plea of not guilty to the majority of the charges, which compelled us to prove our case. Dan said he was ready for trial and the case was taken up, Herb Taylor, T. S. Lamb and H. M. Cross prosecuting, with D. Burr Jones, Francis Hanson and James H. Whitmore appearing for the defense. A jury was sworn in and Sam Mummah was elected foreman. Evidence was introduced and a strong case was made out. Dan got to the front and tried to prove an alibi, but everything was against him. We had the evidence of his appearing in the swell garments and then we had the testimony of men who saw him go to and enter the house where the pink tie was given. However, to cap the climax, and just after the last witness for the defense left the stand, the Chinaman who had owned the turkey appeared. He was put upon the stand and testified to having lost his bird, positively identifying Dan as the man who was seen running down the street with it under his arm.

"The case was given to the jury after the most eloquent arguments had been made, and after being out for some time a verdict of guilty as charged was returned. Not only this, but he was adjudged guilty of turkey stealing.

"It was proposed to delay the sentence, but the convicted man insisted upon knowing his fate and was taken before the judge, who, after the usual lecture on the enormity of the crime, sentenced the convicted man to pay a fine of two gallons of Filipino wine and be imprisoned until paid. Rather than go to jail the wine was brought in and with it we topped off about as enjoyable

THANKSGIVING DAY AS WE EXPERIENCED IN MANILA OR ANY OTHER OLD PLACE.

Three generations ago Maj. Chas. of the Omaha Bee advertising force, began some special work for the Drexel Shoe Co. He was an artist as well as writer, and he illustrated the first advertisement with a comical looking gentleman, having a most benevolent and smiling face. He mentioned him as 'Drexel L. Shoemaker.' The advertisement attracted much attention, being changed every day. At an early day an angular dog was introduced as a companion to 'Drexel,' and was never separated from him. The dog was a political pug, and he was to whether the article would ever omit the dog. Every holiday, political move, local enterprise, great social event, parade, war, change of weather—all these things have been anticipated by 'Drexel,' and his appearance, costume or attitude made to correspond. He has been a man for every occasion, and has never missed a day in addressing an Omaha audience. About 400 cuts have accumulated as a result of this character, and he is now being published in the National Advertiser of New York.
