teachers' salarles' reduced by the last gen-eral assembly from $21,000 to $18,000, and the per capita which was formerly paid for four quarters each year had been reduced to three quarters, being a net reduction of 25 per cent, which in the aggregate on actual attendance for the year reduced the support $3,641, making the total reduction for the year $12,641 from what it had been during a portion of the previous blennial period. With these conditions confronting the board it became necessary to adjust the salarles in such a manner that the total amount expended would not exceed the in-come, and an examination of the payroll proved that this could be done without in-jury to the school, for in many instances extravagant amounts were being paid offi-cers and teachers. The principal of the school was receiving $1,700 for nine months' service, another teacher, $1,200; one teacher, $1,000; one, $300, and three teachers, $600 each. A number of these teachers had in addition to these salaries board and lodg-ing; all the others had dinner and horses stabled and fed during the day, at the ex-pense of the state. Notwithstanding the liberal salaries paid teachers the school, after a thorough ex-amination by the board, was found to be in a very unsatisfactory condition, and the in-vestigation and evidence secured, of which a full report was made, proved conclusively that the lowa School for the Deaf was fall-ST. LOUIS, Dec. 1 .- The Odeon, which was opened to the public last night by the St. Louis Choral-Symphony society in its initial oncert of the season, is one of the most beautiful and artistically complete music halls in the country. This music hall is part of an immense building erected on Grand avenue by W. Albert Swamey at a cost of between $300,000 and $400,000. The front part of the building is a six-story office structure having a depth of 120 feet. The Odeon is in the rear, extending back 150 feet. A feature of the hall is the immense stage, which is 118 feet wide and which is arranged a very insatisfactory condition, and the in-vestigation and evidence secured, of which a full report was made, proved conclusively that the Iowa School for the Deaf was fall-ing far short of the high standard the peo-ple of the state had a right to expect. The principal of the school, instead of superintending the work of the other teach-ers, was satisfied to confine himself to a room with fourteen or fifteen pupils, and rarely, if ever, gave any attention to the work of other teachers. No teachers' meet-ings were held, this being, in the opinion of the principal, unnecessary, and as a re-sult the most antiquated methods in teach-ing the deaf were in vogue, the sign manual being used to a great extent by both teach-signs as a means of communication, and not required to either spell with the hand or write, except in a limited manner, the pupils proved to be very deficient in the use of the English words and found great difficulty in answering the simplest ques-tions by written language. A radical change from old methods has concert or operatic purposes. The seating capacity is 2,100. Homer Moore, a musician of note, who was connected with the congress of musicians at the Transmississipp Exposition, Omaha, originated the idea which resulted in the erection of the Odeon.
