(Copyright, 1899, by Press Publishing Co.) LONDON, Dec. 30.- (New York World Cablegram-Special Telegram :- "If we can Deg. only conquer the Boer republies by making foodstuffs contraband, then I say, as an imperialist, it were better we had never entered upon this war."

These are words attributed by trustworthy report to Lord Rosebery when discussing the question with a former minister at the Brooks club on Thursday. The foodstuff question, which, as dispatches have noted, has been studiously ignored by the London press, has suddenly been pushed to the front by Lord Rosebery's letter to the Times. The letter was received by the Times on Thursday night, but was only published today. The interval obviously had been employed by the Times to get "inspiration" on the cabinet's intentions.

Therefore, the Times' editorial intimation that the British government will strive to establish a distinction between foodstuffs must not be made contraband of war. Dip-lomatic experts outside of British circles DUELING IN GERMAN ARMY for the commissariat and foodstuffs for the sustenance of the noncombatant population is taken to indicate the government's de

The Times argues that if England sets the precedent of exempting foodstuffs from contraband now, such a precedent is likely to influence any country which may hereafter be at war with her. This opportunist reason is taken to show how profound is the ficers of the German army. Several men dismay of the cabinet over the possibilities had fought in Saxony and the Thuringian in the South African situation. The panic which has seized the govern-

The Ninth lancers, with a battery, went along the Modder river east of the camp and blew up a farmhouse between the lines of the Twelfth lancers, then they went west of the railway and drew fire unexpectedly from the Boers' quick-firing Nordenfeldt, which has an exceedingly disagreeable sound-has a moral effect far greater than its real effect. The naval guns by the watering station finally silenced the Nordenfeldt, which only
