Remarkable Skill of Orris Benson.

Herald, Orris Benson has lived in dense darkness and absolute silence, yet he has developed a most cheerful disposition, more than ordinary capabilities for learning and an absolute genius as a modeler. For seven years he has been a pupil in the New York Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, which he entered little more than an animated organism, with no sense but that of touch; yet through patient training under the direction of Enoch H. Carrier, principal, he has shown a mental growth and perception that are astonishing and are attracting wide attention. Orris is 16 years old. He is the son of a carpenter living at White Lake, Sullivan county, this state, and when 2 years old suffered from an attack of cerebro-spinal meningitis that deprived him of sight, speech and hearing. He was helpless, and for years was alone in a mental darkness as great as the physical one that surrounded him in his terrible silence. Then he was brought to New York and the apparently hopeless task of developing mental faculties that were on the road to idiocy through neglect was en-

Miss Bessie L. Nixon was assigned to instruct him, and with a kindly pressure of the hand she tried to impress upon his almost dormant consciousness the fact that she was his friend, wished him well and would do what she could for him.

This is really a wonderful thing when we consider that the boy knows absolutely nothing of the appearance of buildings either in general effect or proportion, excepting such information as is conveyed to him through

GARFIELD AND MR. MOODY.

Gift of Captivating Friends.
"There was a striking resemblance beween the late Mr. Moody and President Garfield," says the New Orleans Democrat. "Garfield was the taller of the two, but otherwise they were strangely alike. They had the same massive frame, the same suave, smiling cast of features, the same enthusiastic temperament, the same facility for anecdote, and the same effect of sincerity in everything that they said or did. Their style of oratory was almost identical and both possessed the gift of captivating people at first sight. One of Mr. Moody's most ardent admirers, for instance, was A. C. Wheeler, the well known New York dramatic critic, who writes under the nom de plume of 'Nim Crinkle,' and it would be impossible to imagine two men more utterly dissimilar. Wheeler is a veteran Bohemian and a maker of polished phrases; a student, a dreamer, a poet and a noted after-dinner wit. In appearance he is thin, fruit and a trifle sardonic-in every way the antithesis of the evangelist; yet the warmest frien 1ship sprung up between them, lasting un-cooled to the end. I interviewed Mr. Moody several times," continued the speaker, "on the last occasion about three years ago, and I asked him among other things, preparation, if any, he made for his longer public addresses. Why, I jot down a memorandum of a string of storice,' he replied, with one of his characteristic, boyish laughs. Then he explained that he mapped out his general line of argument in advance, thinking up some striking anecdotes with which to clinch each successive point. That was all done mentally, and the only notes he made were a few eatch words on a card to remind him of the stories in case any of them should slip his mind. He showed me one of these memoranda, and I have often regretted I did not ask him for it as a souvenir. It was simply a string of words, unintelligible to anybody except himselffor example, 'ccean greyhound,' 'battle of Waterloo,' 'coral reef insect,' 'first locomotive, 'breaking in new boots'-these are a few I remember. Each was a one to one of

With what interest was watched the slow rogress of kindling the first mental spark in that almost isolated mind! His gentle inquiries by moving her fingers, according to the manual, within the palm of his hand. At first the pronunciation of the words was mechanical, and the mental effort was devoted merely to the effecting of the combination of sounds. With persistent practice the boy learned to think out words, the vocal organs were trained into use, and then enunciation came, uncertain at first, but afterward with sufficient clearness to be under-pupil the task became really fascinating. Every month the mental growth was such that the teacher found in the blind deaf boy remarkable powers of intellect, and soon he became the shining light of the institution. So it has gone from that day until this, with remarkable progress at ever step. Orris Benson has become an expert mod-tails of ornamentation. How? He has not even heard a description of it, but he has seen it through the eyes of one of his deat fellows, and has been told by fingers as clever as his how the cal skill.
