Interesting Incidents In and About Omaha's Marriage License Bureau.

Youth of Twenty-Three Marries a Woman Just Twice His Age and Seems to He Happy-Many Questions Are Asked.

The installation of Judge Vinsonhaler into the office of county judge seems to have brought with it a revival in the matrimonial license purchaser half a block away. industry-if affairs of the heart may be classed among the industrials. On the first day of Judge Vinsonhaler's tenure there was a record-breaking array of marriage licenses, and there is nothing to denote a discontinuance of the rush. H. B. signature to application for marriage license. of symmetry and gracefulness, there is something shaky about his hand when he goes to write his name on the paper that is to be his passport to matrimony.

Despite the efforts of the marriage license clerk to give an air of freedom to his sanetum and to remove from it every suggestion of embarrassment or restraint, some inexplicable bugbear hangs to the place. The Nebraska law does not require the presence of the bride-to-be when application is filed, but she is frequently in attendance, especially if the contracting parties are from the country districts and are to have the ceremony performed in the city.

Many young persons, and not a few old ones, living in remote parts of this and adjoining states, fancy that it adds to the happiness of the occasion to have the marriage take place in a big town, therefore they come to Omaha. This class of seekers after matrimony usually have the ceremony performed by the county judge, and thus save themselves the trouble of wandering married in about the city in search of a minister. After they are married they generally take the first train back home, and the villagers accredit them with having enjoyed the luxury of a bridge tour.

It costs Iowa people just a little more to get married in Omaha than in Council Bluffs, owing to the difference of the laws of Nebraska and Iowa, yet the fact remains that many Council Bluffs couples pay motor fare ported to be raising a regiment in this counnated to colleges, universities, academies, across the big bridge. The applicants must state in addition to their own names and residences and where they expect to reside after marriage, the name of their parents, their place of nativity and a half dozen other ancestral questions. It is a fad with most young men and vomen, and some of the old ones, too, that they must look just right as to personal appearance before the ceremony is said. The average young man will rub hie hands over his bair, and the women make an effort to straighten their hats.

Among the elite more or less mystery always attaches to the issuance of a marriage license. The bride-to-be does not appear at the court house, as her presence is not a requirement of law. The propective groom awkwardly appears, and after looking twice to see that he is not sus-
