The Art Amateur has an interesting article on the manufacture of old cooper implements. One factory is situated in Soho, London, where old incense burners are hammered out. The copy is then coated with asphaltum, through which the design would be traced, when it would then be caten out in an acid bath, saving the time which would be required to cut out the pattern with a piercing saw. The bath leaves thin ridges, by which such work may be detected. The work would then be annualed, and would be permitted to exidize and water.
