Will Put an End to the Constant Guessing as to Whether There is Shortage in Ment Cattle-Work Thoroughly Systematized.

eternal guessing as to whether there is a shortage in meat cattle." eaid Fred P. Johna special agent of the census office, who has been in Omaha in the lead with the biggest bargains. on business connected with the live stock census which is to be taken this year for the first time in history. Mr. Johnson is the editor of the Denver Dafly Stockman, the official newspaper of the National Live Stock association, which organigation is assisting the government in the making of this census.

"We say it is the first live stock census ever taken," continued Mr. Johnson, "It may sound strange, but such is the fact. There have been attempts made heretofore. but they were little more than attempts and the statistics secured are admitted, even by the government, to be unreliable and of little use. It has heretofore been an almost impossible proposition to secure an accurate census on live stock, principally for the reason that the stockmen themselves have been opposed to telling the truth about what they own. No matter how honest the stockman might be otherwise, when it came to the question, 'How many cattle do you own?' nine out of ten would simply find it Impossible to tell the truth. The result was that the figures secured were totally unre-

Conthe work and we are already pushing the tional association has been appointed special under way.

'We realize, however, that we nave a big job ahead of us and that without the active 80.6 per cent. The beets grown on the first co-operation of the stockmen themselves it tract were sold to people in the neighborwill be an almost impossible task. The arrangements are such, however, that there is really no excuse for any stockman to lie about his holdings in this case, for we have thrown every possible safeguard around the work, and the information received as to what any individual owns cannot possibly be cient supply for a factory in this city known to any one but a few men connected with the census office, and they are sworn The excuse that a stockman will not tell what cattle he owns for fear of the county assessor is no good this year, for the county assessor cannot possibly learn what any man reports unless he tells him-

Imperiance of Correct Census.

"Aside from all this, however, a correct census is of such importance to each indiwidual engaged in the industry that once the matter is thoroughly understood we anticipate little trouble. In the first place stockmen have for years been busy guessing how many cattle, or sheep, or hogs there are in the country and no two will agree on the subject. Hundreds of stockmen have gone broke in the live stock business simply because they pinned their faith to the proposition that there was a shortage of cattle in the country. Thousands more have sold their cattle for little or nothing only a few months later to buy back at an increased price. We claim that it is possible to have a knowledge of the supply of cattle in the country, and once this condition is known the live stock industry can be put upon a stable and safe basis.

"The information we propose to get is the number of cattle, sheep, hogs, horses and goats in the country on June 1, this year. This information will be classified to show the ages and sex and class, and if we are successful, as we expect to be, we will have the city salesmen of the wholesale houses a basis upon which to build a system of annual and perhaps monthly statistics for the information of the industry as to the visible supply of cattle of commerce. It is the opinion of the national association that the future of the industry depends largely upon the securing of this information. Such information will reduce to the minimum the risk to capital invested, and we hope will enable stockmen to secure loans on cattle security at a much lower rate of than at present. This of itself would be well worth the trouble and should be an inducement for every stockman to tell the truth. Whole Country Interested.

"The whole country is interested in this shortage would mean. It would mean an license and pay a new tax. advance in the price of meat far beyond present figures and there is no way of discovering the approach of such a shortage or its extent until the high prices fall to bring the cattle to market. Then there is always the danger of a fictitious shortage. If a large number of people can be made to believe that there is a shortage, whether one exists or not, they will hold back their cattle, prices will advance and then the dammed-up supply will come in suddenly, bringing disaster and ruin with it. The market depends upon the supply and demand. If the supply is a known quantity. the danger from wild speculation is reduced to a minimum, and the live stock industry is soon diverted of the large speculative condition that is now its curse and results in such wide fluctuations on the least provocation.

"It is our intention to use every possible means to get at the real facts as to the number of head of live stock in the United States. We shall collect the figures on all owners of less than 500 head, through the regular ennumerators, but on the range and where an individual or corporation owns over 500 head, we shall go after him with special agents. While we hope in this way to get the real facts in the case, we still have other resources-the many organizations, for instance, who are well acquainted with the conditions of their members-and we shall use every possible plan to check the returns and get them absolutely correct, or so nearly so that they may be relied upon. There is already considerable interest among stockmen over this matter and we propose to give the fullest publicity to our plans in order that all stockmen may understand fully just what is going to be done."
