Grant's Greatness and Wolseley's. General Grosvepor of Ohio said, in part:

General Grosvenor of Ohio said, in part:

Thirty-five years have passed over our heads since Grant achieved the culmination of his great fame as a soldier. During that time there have been wars in the world, during that time there have been great changes in military tactics in military organization, in military supplies and munitions and all that appertain to the military arm of governments, but I venture to say that among those who have come and gone, among those who have come and gone, among those who have led armies in Egypt, in Germany, in France, there has been no man who has any pretense of competition with Grant as a soldier today. He has been criticised somewhat by one of the great generals of Europe, great in the amount of pay that he draws, great in the high rank that he holds, when we are considering same hiller of Grant is the high full uniform of a general equipped for the OUTING field with top boots and gauntiers, his cloak splendld decorations that he hose, but I ask my countrymen here today, when we are considering something of Grant in the light of thirty-five years, whether we may not with a pride that is enjoyable contrast the career of Grant, compare all his mistakes—if he ever made any—compare them with the most critical eye to the best thing that has been done by the British army in its great campaign against the Boers, and tell me whether Grant does not shine like a meteor. I think the strategy of Grant that centered in the Wilderness and in front of Richmond, the magnificent of ganization of the army of the Potomac, will live as an exemplar of military strategy and perfection long after Wolseley, the man who had deprecated him, long after Wolseley, the hero of Teles-l-Kebir in Egypt and the planner of the strategy of South Africa will have been relegated to his proper position among the great generals of the world, (Applause.)

Richardeon of Tennessee, the minority

Richardson of Tennessee, the minority leader, who fought in the confederate army against Grant, said, in part:

The most extravagant and fulsome culogy that can possibly be bestowed by human lips on General Grant does not in the slightest degree detogate from the pure and matchless fame of the heroism of those who fought against him and of all true confederates in that bloody period during which his marvelous character was developed and which gave him the opportunity to win everlasting renown. But for the indomitable courage and valor of the warner of Ohio. Richardson of Tennessee, Warner of Illinois. Linney of North Carolia, Gardner of Mississippi, Brosius of Pennsylvania and Dolliver of Iowa.

The gallery opposite the speaker's rostrum had been reserved for the members of the Grand Army of the Republic and was crowded with grizzled veterans who came to pay tribute to the memory of their loved comrade. In the area in front of the speaker's not confederate soldier I revere his memory and demand, and have a just right to demand, to share in the honor and glory which cluster like jeweled diadems around his name and render him cohepicuous above his contemporaries as an American soldier and citizen. Confederates can and do honor him because in battle he was a foeman No progress we tiement of the made on either.

the clamor of the hour and write a special message of appeal from that decision to the American people, "whose judgment," he said, "so seidom errs and against whose will I have no policy to enforce."
In the midst of our new national responsibilities I think American statesmen could gather a great deal of strength and encouragement by going over again the messages, papers, letters and biography of Ulysses S. Grant.

After a handsome eulogy by Harris, Turley delivered a notable address from the view point of a private soldier in the ranks of the confederate army. He said that the sentiments of the people of the south had in recent years changed toward Grant and gradually had become those of cordiality and esteem. He never could reach, he said, tha inner chamber of the southern people's hearts. That was occupied alone by the 'immortal Lee," whom the people of the southland loved because he was the very incarnation of their cause. Turley said he did paid tribute to the memory of Grant.

Turner spoke of Grant as the "great silent soldier who lies upon the bank of the Hudthe wound thus made." He considered him as combining the qual-
