MAKING TIDE SALOONS BLEED

'Doc' George W. Long Revives the Shear Injunction Industry. Charles Leitold, the Victim of Long's Attack, Says He is Unable to Pay a Cent.

HE SUSPECTS HIS LATE PARTNER

Samuel Christensen Robbed of $20 in a Manner That He Thinks Queer. When Sam Christensen, an employee of the Northwestern railway, returned at an early hour yesterday morning to the saloon where he kept his quarters with John Fosdike, he found the latter loaded and tied to the bed and gagged.

STARTS ON A MAN WHO WILL FIGHT Charles Leitold, the Victim of Long's Attack, Says He is Unable to Pay a Cent. Leitold was more outspoken. He said he regarded the proceedings as a direct attempt at blackmail, as he was known to have some money, and that for a money consideration the injunction would be dropped.

Emulating the example set by Attorney J. J. Shea, who for a number of years kept the saloon men of this city in continual terror by injunction proceedings under the mule tail law, 'Doc' George W. Long has commenced the same practice.

Christensen reported the robbery to the police, at the same time intimating that he considered Fosdike's version of how the money came to be missing somewhat suspicious. Fosdike, although closely questioned by the police, stuck to his original story.
