"There is a terrible hole in our club since Captain O'Connell has been laid up," says W. R. Kent, the local base ball enthusiast and authority. "Not that Mackey is not without a head. There is where Jack lows, white to play and mate in two moves: O'Connell shines. He uses that headpiece of his at all times, and while we must give Bill Rourke great credit for picking the team, we must also remember O'Connell is the hoy who is responsible for every play that comes off. He leads the team in batting, leads the second basemen plays good, hard, honest ball at all times and his many friends will hope to see him back in the game soon."

Comments: North opens his trump suit regardless of the honor turned, having no tenace over it, but cannot afford to continue after being forced at trick three. After trick five, how-ever, he is in a delicate situation, as it is clearly evident that he can expect no as-sistance whatever from his partner and must make the hand by himself. Barring false cards West has only two diamonds, and, as he only shows four in his own suit, is apt to have four furning; therefore, if North can retain the ace of his own suit, which will enable him to pick up the commanding card in the next round and allow his partner to be overraffed, he will have enough trumps to bring in the small cards, and the play of the hand illustrates how neatly his plan was cartied into effect. the amateur one-mile record.
