WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27—Twenty-second Annual Commencement Exercises, University of Nebraska.

THURSDAY, JUNE 28—Country Club Opening Reception in Afternoon. Reception and Dance in Evening.

Society seems to have turned almost its entire attention to out-of-door sports and as a result several of the best features of polo, archery and rowing have been organized.

Last week seven young society women met in secret and pledged their pin money for weeks in advance to a fund which is to purchase a boat and all equipments.

Of course golf is permanently popular and the opening of the Country club, which is to occur next Saturday, is the topic of absorbing interest.

Wouldn't you like to spend the Fourth at the Paris exposition? It is to be celebrated in proper style by the Omaha contingent.

At one of the recent dances—almost the last of the season—the young man almost undid the work of the whole winter.

Beman had a long victim of transitory fancies for a long while, but now at last had applied himself along a definite line for a year and all was like to be well with him.

There was another woman present who shared with the foremost the honors of the evening. She was a guest from another city and stories of her wealth and accomplishments were scarcely needed to give distinction to that stately dark head and magnificent carriage.

The floor was crowded and the night was warm. So when the music began for the seventh number Beman led the way to a nook in the staircase.

"Don't you think it would be cooler out on the veranda," said Beman, hurriedly and wholly on impulse.

"I haven't done such a thing since I left school," said the girl, smiling. "I've really reformed."

The next dance transpired to the entire satisfaction of Beman. When it was over he drew his program from his pocket with a slight twinge of conscience.

"What dance was that?" Beman heard a man say. Beman was looking for his hat. "Oh, that was the dance, wasn't it?"

"What dance was that?" Beman heard a man say. Beman was looking for his hat. "Oh, that was the dance, wasn't it?"
