The flames got a good hold on the Phoenicia and she was towed out into midstream

The fire had by this time become so flerce that the officials of the Hamburg-American line decided that the only way to prevent a total destruction of their great pier was to blow up the side of the dock at which the Phoenicia lay, and this was done. A number of barges docked at the pier also took fire and they were allowed to burn.

The worst tale will come from the steamship Main, which was unable to be towed from the pier. The vessel had only arrived this morning and some of the passengers were still on board and when the cry of fire was raised a number of them were seen to run to the burning decks. Most of them jumped overboard and, save for the few who were picked up by the tugs, not hotel and hospital in the city of Hoboken is crowded with injured. Some of the pas-had narrow escapes. They had gotten out the freight ships Westminster and Wyefield as far as they could on the pier to the south of the blazing docks and were enburst of flame from the pier adjoining which for a time threatened to cut off the men and set fire to the pier they were on. The men dropped into the water and clung to the piles for a few moments and then a shift of the wind drove the flames back and they were able to retreat.

The smoke which poured out of the flames and ascended high into the air blew almost directly eastward and maintained its column for a distance of about seventy miles, as it was seen clearly beyond Babylon, L. I. One man in the hospital with burned

He said he was helpless in the water when the other threw an arm about him and buoyed him up. The other's face was fearfully burned and the other arm was useless, but he treaded water and floated so skillfully that they floated down the river and a tug went to their rescue. The man who told the story said he fainted after being rescued and did not know if his rescuer had also been taken out of the

The rapid spread of the flames after they started in the cotton is largely ascribed to the dust with which the pier sheds and rotunda were cover d. The dust arising from the many different articles, such as cotton, ascends and ordinarily settles upon the rafters and beams and in every crevice. It is said to burn almost as rapidly as tinder. The destruction of the docks will be a severe loss to the steamship comapny, as it had only just finished repairing, enlarging
