Quarrel Between Belligerent Brothers-in-Law Reaches Judge Keysor's Court.

Falconer Alleges that Jesse Dug the Canal for the Purpose of Converting the Gifford Farm Into a Morass.

Judge Keysor will make a journey six miles into the country to peer into a ditch on the farm of Jesse C. Root. Root and embrolled in a bitter family feud which has appeared in various forms before police and justice courts, reaching on this occasion the higher tribunal of Judge Keysor.

Through the midst of Root's land runs a clough which has caused the farmer embarrassment in wet weather. Accordingly, Root dug a ditch to drain the marsh, his alleged intention being to empty the flow into the Papio creek. Gifford, who owns the adjoining farm, claims that his brother-inlaw maliciously constructed the canal, intending to carry the water upon the Giffort lands, thereby transforming them into a swamp. Gifford therefore sought a restrain ing order, which was granted, and the case came up for hearing yesterday.

It was pointed out to the court that, although a restraining order had been issued, the surety offered by Gifford was on a temporary injunction and the order was revoked on this technicality. Gifford may easily file a new and proper bond, however and the court's journey to West Center street is to ascertain the true facts in the Countless cases have been litigated during the last ten years, first Root and then his brother-in-law appearing as plaintiff, until the costs in the various cases reach into the thousands of dollars. In an action brought by Gifford, now pending in a justice court, the plaintiff alleges that his brother-in-law has hauled a dead horse to a point where a nauseous odor is wafted to the Gifford home-
