His captive proved to be a colored waiter on a Northwestern dining car named Johnson, who easily proved that he was not in the city at the time the robbery was committed and Weir was forced to let him go.

This did not meet the wishes of Herman premature and he moved an amendment empty hall satisfied the majority of the Howard Scott, charged with participating delegates present that such a committee would be almost superfluous and Schurz was induced to waive his demand for the appointment of a committee on credentials Then Schurz, who throughout the convention did most of the talking, suggested that roll call by precincts be had and the delegates present be authorized to cast the full vote of their respective precincts. J. P. Organ and N. O'Brien also made similar motions in such rapid succession that the chairman got tangled up and this and the thermometer at over 100 in the shade caused him to lose his temper and he said if there was any more disputing over the manner in which he stated the motions he would insist that they be placed before him in writing.

The motions, however, continued to come until the reverend chairman said: "We are getting so many resolutions that we will soon be like the senator from the southwe will not know where we are at." This restored the harmony and the roll call by precincts proceeded with each precinct as it was called naming a member of the committee to select the three sets of delegates. The roll call showed that nineteen out of the forty precincts were not epresented in the convention. The committee then retired to formulate its report. During its absence E. P. Searle, president of the Bryan-Stevenson club, aroused the only show of enthusiasm of the day by extending an invitation to the delegates to attend the formal opening of the club's headquarters at the Ogden house that night, when there would be plenty of good cheer in the shape of eatables and drinkables on tap.
