When you have a sensation, after trying to eat, of your heart seeming to cease to heat, and of a billed dizziness that drives you for a time to your bed, don't blame it on your heart or your head; it is simply a warning that your stomach is feeding these other organs with impoverished blood.

When a very sudden sound or iar sets you in a quiver, when you seem to have lost all hope or ambition for everything, the first thing to do is to get your stomach in a healthy condition.

When you feel that every muscle in the body is drawn to its utmost tension and that the slightest effort involves a strain your weakened brain and half-starved nerves are only warning you of their poverty because your stomach can't perform its duty regularly and promptly.
