E. M. Tracy presided and after the enrollment of several new members and the transaction of routine business, called upon H. C. Brome to speak. That gentleman responded briefly, saying that the one thing of more importance to the republican party and the country than the aspirations of any man for office is the carrying of the state for McKinley and republican principles. He believed the chances very favorable. The populists are badly frightened and it is t e hoped that the contest now in progress in this county will so shape itself as to contribute to republican victory.

Chairman Tracy called upon Edward Rosewater, who responded by saying that no message which could reach President Mc-Kinley on the 7th of November would cause deliver addresses. him greater pleasure than intelligence that Nebraska had repudiated Bryanism and had regained its place in the republican column. He had it direct from the president personally that the republican official family is not taking more interest in the result in any state, not even in Ohio, than in the fight in Nebraska, not only because this is a pivotal state in the national election, but because the unusual duty devolves upon it of electing two United States senators this year. Next to casting its electorial vote for a republican president, it is important that two men be selected as senators who will uphold the president. While it might be premature to say that the state is going to go republican. is undeniable that there has been a decided and favorable change in political senti-

Jefferis Makes Explanation.

When Mr. Resewater retired there were calls for Jefferis, who came forward and said that he believed that he had as great an interest in the country's welfare as acy man in the room. He went back to the recollection of his revolutionary sires at Brandywine and said that his father had fought for the country also.
