Clients Wait in Vain for Horoscopes

for Which They Had Paid in Advance.

Prof. Irwin Flint, clairvoyant, has disappeared from his accustomed haunt, 1707 Cass street, and his large clientele is left to mourn the loss of sums ranging from $6 to $50. For five weeks he has been doing a land office business at the above number. He read horoscopes, found hidden treasure and gave lessons in his art, for all of which he charged generous fees and always in advance

Wednesday of this week was the day he was to "deliver the goods." All his patrons were asked to call Wednesday morning and he would tell them what they 3 o'clock yesterday morning he was prowanted to know. They called-fifteen of them, twelve women and three men-but found his rooms vacant. The bird had flown.

Each received a note, however, saying the professor had gone to Canton, O., and would return in ten days or two weeks. He had been summoned there to the bedside of his sick mother. None are so credulous as to believe this story; they do not expect to see him again. Most of his dupes are poor workingwomen.

Among Flint's effects left at the Cass street address is a clairvoyant's license issued for six months by the city of Omaha, which does not expire until December 21.
