Going Into Winter quarters.

A letter from Captain Wallace Tay'or, written on the day of the presidential election, at Balayan, P. L. has been received by his father, Cadet Taylor. This letter made quick time between Manila and Omaha, it being one month to a day from the time it left the island until it reached its destination. The captain says that his battailon is getting ready to go into winter quarters at Sasagbu, a station in the mountains, where he expects to have some lively experiences with the insurgents.

ZEM-ZEM SPOILS THE MUSIC

Startling Effect of the Combination Amages Tangier Temple's Guests.

SHRINERS FORCED TO EVICT ORCHESTRA

Notable Session of the Order Marred by the Untoward Conduct of the Men Employed to Furnish the Music.

Zem-zem may be all right in the intt'atory services, as for instance the thought of finally reaching the well is a great incentive to the weary pilgrim and doubtless materially aids him in holding on to the rope. But it doesn't do for the musician to tarry too long 'neath the shade of the date palm when the well is bubbling over and sparkling even as glitters the kuymisa of camel's milk under the rays of the moon For then doth the fumes of the sacred beverage to swiftly to the brain and while it certainly inspireth poetic fancies and mel odles of the blest, it gives not the performance of these to the edification of those who still linger on the safe side of a known capacity. It is just as well to wait until the next day to transcribe. Also, if a musician has a certain part to perform, let him not dally with the glowing juice of the grape until he shall have done that for which he expects to receive plastres and other things which pass current in the mar-

These and other apothegms are drawn from the experience of the Nobles of Tan-Mr. Pitt Crawley gier Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. They had a ceremonial session last night, at which twenty-six candidates were initiated. A Miss banquet followed the work of the lodge. For this banquet music had Lady been provided in the shape of a Mrs. provided in the shape of a string orchestra. The musicians came to the banquet room early and until 12 o'clock they waited for the members to appear at the board. At the stroke of 12 the nobles entered the banquet hall and the orchestra greeted them with what appeared to be an inebriate's fantaisie upon an Arabian march. Violins squeaked, snare drums rolled, viols growled, each in its own key and keeping its own time. It was really an American arrangement of a Chinese symphony. As the marching columns reached the tables startled eyes looked from beneath the fez on every head. Quietly the master of ceremonies requested the musicians to cease their music, but still and its restricted range of thought and the awful discord filled the room. From action, it may be easily guessed how much all over the hall came demands that the musicians be removed. Finally it was necessary to summon two bluecoated guardians of the peace to suppress the enthustastic musicians. Then it was found that taking advantage of the absence of the custodians the members of the orchestra had filled themseves with the juice of the vine to such an extent as to be irresponsible. Most Notable Assemblage.

The meeting was one of the largest ever held by Tangler temple. Twenty-nine candidates were led over the hot sands and at midnight were resting in the oasis, drinking of the waters of zem-zem and other things with a syarkle. Visiting nobles were present from thirteen temples of the order, including Mecca temple of New York, the parent temple of the society. At the close of the ritualistic ceremonies the banquet was served, at which toasts were responded to as follows: "The Nobility," I. R. Andrews; "The Chinese Situation." Cart E. It has been pointed out before in this column that it is practically impossible to first column and overlooked the second, in compress the essentials of a successful work of fiction into the limits of the ordinary play. So many of the details must be omitted, so many of the sidelights eliminated, so many of the motives by which the characters are actuated, ignored, that, at the best, almost any dramatization or a printed work must be more or less unsatisfactory. If this is true of the modern work of fiction, with its few characters more difficult the task becomes when the work of the complexity and scope of Thackeray's materpiece, "Vanity Fair"the greatest satirical work of almost any age-is the subject of the dramatist's endeavors.

Whether Mr. Nevins has done his work as well as it is possible for any one to do can be better told later on when Mrs. Fiske vists the city, as she will do in the near future. If, however, Mr. Langdon Mitchell, by whom her stage version has been made, has not succeeded in grasping the salient features of this really remarkable novel better than Mr. Nevins has done, then, indeed, we may be permitted to wonder why and how it is that with it she has caught the public fancy to such an extent as she seems to have done. For Mr. Nevins' version is essentially weak. He has given us a bit here and there out of the book, but his work is disconnected and fragmentary and not at all satisfac-He has missed some of the most dramatic features of the story, and he has not been happy in his arrangements of such material as he has selected to use. meet some emergency.

As a matter of fact, were it not that the extraordinary talent of Miss Gertrude Coghlan needs but the slightest kind of a vehicle in which to display itself, the piece would inevitably fall to the ground of its own weight. So long as she remains in the principle role, it will be accepted and enjoyed, despite its faults. For it of South Sloux City, Sloux City's Nebraska must have been apparent from the very first to the large audience last night that in Miss Coghlan there is the making of Rounds at the Grand opera house last night. a star of the first magnitude, and that it will not be long before her reputation will equal, if it does not exceed, that en-Norton, Clinton Orcutt, George D. Powell, Daniel adventuress in Thackeray's immorta; tale, her work was without flaw or blemish, and was as clean cut and as brilliant as crystal. At every point during the progress of the play there was an exhibition of self-restraint that was truly admirable, and not for a moment was the perfect poise of the young actress lost. The temptation to actresses would have been likely to yield. was resolutely put aside, and her work was marked by an easy naturalness throughout the entire drama. She did not forget that, when she had married Rawden Crawley, and as a result he had been cut off by his rich aunt, in the future she must live by her wits, and live she did and in almost regal magnificence. Not for a single instant was that seductive smile by which the too susceptible hearts of the men who fluttered around her as mothe around a candle were touched, and they bound to her side as with hoops of steel. For the women by whom she was hated, and whom she hated in return, the smile degenerated into a sneer that bespoke the utter heartlessness of the one around whose lips it played. And when at last, her career seemed to have been run and she was living in her garret, friendless and alone, she was still the same thorough bred that she was in the days when fortune heaped its favors in her lap. It was artsuch art as is rarely seen upon the stage at the present day. The supporting company, with one or two or three exceptions, was mediocre Commendable work was done by Mr. Herbert Fortier as Rawden Crawley, and by Mr. Cecil Kingstone as Lord Steyne. Harry Hanlon made a very acceptable Joe Sedley and May Donchue gave the role of Mrs. Major O'Dowd a capital interpretation. The remainder of the people in the rather large cast, while adequate to the demands made upon them, did nothing to entitle them to individual mention.

The staging and costuming of the play were all that could be desired, and the performance as a whole must be rated as one of the most artistic that has been seen dur-our district," said Mr. Hays, "but of course elected. I am pleased, however, to know Grand. my pleasure would be greater if I had been that the Third district is now republican territory and that no fusion candidate for any office is likely to win there in future

"Several causes contributed to my defeat. Last year Mr. Holcomb had a majority of 4,600 in the Third district and that was the vote that was generally considered necessary for me to overcome. I am impressed with the belief that a large number of voters thought it would be impossible to overcome that big fusion majority and for that reason they gave up the battle before it was fought out. In the district there were 48,000 votes cast on the presidential ticket and less than 45,000 on the congressional ticket, showing that about 3,000 electors did not vote at all for congressman. McKinley's plurality in the district was 1,227 and Mr. Robinson, my opponent, had but 177 plurality. If those 3,000 people had voted on the congressional ticket I would have received a plurality something like McKin-ticket by the faults in the form of the official ballots. They were printed in doublecolumn and hundreds of men voted the which happened to be the congressional ticket. Another thing that caused a slump in the vote from the head of the ticket was the fact that many voters thought that marking one cross in the circle to vote for all of the presidential electors signified a vote for the entire ticket. If I had had a man at every polling place to tell each voter not to forget to vote for congressman and explain to him the correct method of doing so, I would have been elected."
